A DEMOCRATIC VIEW OF THE Oregon, if any there be, who incline to the belief that the vigorous opposition to the free trade policy on wool is confined strictly to republicans, is commended the sunny sentiments of John M. Cooper, the veteran Democratic editor of the Review and Examiner, of Washington Pa., who has thus far refused to join his party in waging war upon the industries of the country.

From the opening of the current tariff discussion down to the present time his paper has sturdily maintained an opposition to free wool and other injurious features of the Mill's bill. Mr. Cooper was asked the other day whether he was influenced in his views by the fact that Washington is a great wool-producing county.
