SENATORIAL GLADIATORS.

There is a disposition on the part of certain lofty-minded editors to deprecate the recent vocal combat in the senate, and to read nice lectures to our statesmen upon the duty of gravity and forbearance in their processes of debate. To a certain extent, such criticism is always in order, of course. Hardly a day passes that there is not room for complaint as to congressional offenses against dignity and good taste. But when this is said the fact remains, we may as well acknowledge, that the people enjoy a personal contest between a couple of plucky and fluent political leaders a good deal more than they do the customary order of profound and monotonous discussion. They like to see men put to the test of courage, and the competition of intellectual vigor and alertness which such encounters imply. It is not true that they think more of a statesman who declines to defend himself when he is personally assailed than they do of one who accepts the challenge and returns blow for blow. They like a man who isn't afraid, and who doesn't avoid danger by permitting others to accuse or deride him at their pleasure. Even if he gets the worst of it—as he is sometimes bound to do—it is better for him to have fought and been whipped than not to have fought at all. This phase of popular feeling has prevailed at all times in our history. We are a combative people and take delight in spectacles of contention, from a senatorial battle down to an ordinary dog-fight. It is an affliction to say that we are scandalized when two statesmen grapple for a trial of strength on personal grounds, and proceed to pummel each other to the best of their ability. The truth is we admire their bravery and their energy, and watch the struggle with the keenest interest. The scene in the senate the other day when Messrs. Ingalls and Voorhees made an amphitheater of that august chamber was not unprecedented, by any means. Similar exhibitions have repeatedly taken place there—not merely in our latter days of alleged political decadence, but also in former times which we are accustomed to cite for their superior virtue and their glory of real giants. There has never been a time when either branch of congress was so thoroughly impregnated with the spirit of peace and patience that men would not provoke and resent personal affronts in language of the most vivid and vitriolic description. And there has never been a time when the people failed to take an attentive and encouraging view of performances of that sort. It may be that this is a sign of serious fault in our civilization. Perhaps we thus unwittingly ourselves of the late Matthew Arnold's charge, that we are sadly wanting in the matter of sweetness and light. But there is as much reason to believe on the other hand—is there not?—that it is only a manifestation of that inbred and aggressive national instinct by which all our victories have been achieved and all our fame accomplished.

As a piece of rhetorical eloquence Col. John P. Irish's speech was a success, but he did not attempt to explain why the proposed "tariff reduction" that he and Grover Cleveland want the people of Oregon to adopt, takes the tariff off of, and cheapens the price of wool, lumber and the products the poor man has to sell, and keeps the tariff on ready-made woolen goods, sugar, rice, and the products the poor man has to buy.

Col. Irish finds an entire new excuse for Cleveland's veto of the river and harbor bill. It is because there were two bills, one in each session of the 49th congress. Um, ah! most extraordinary wisdom. Yes, to be sure, there are a few more people in a thickly populated city than there are in a sparsely settled country, and naughty congress should not have done so, but all the same intelligent voters will withhold giving their franchise to the man who throttled our river and harbor improvement, with a large available surplus in the treasury.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Contributed by the W. C. T. U. Mrs. M. B. Reese, one of the national organizers of the W. C. T. U., was recently stricken down with acute rheumatism at Yreka, Cal., where she had gone to begin the work of organizing northern led. After several days of great suffering she was taken back to Seattle, where she remained in Grace hospital until a few days since. She has now returned to her home on Bashor island, and although weak and crippled, is not suffering. Hopes are entertained that she will be able to resume her work in the near future.

Among other interesting features of the State Sunday School Convention, held during the past week was a plea for the teaching of temperance in our Sabbath schools, by Mrs. L. P. Round, of this city. She earnestly urged the teachers to post themselves upon temperance as taught in the bible that they might be able to meet and controvert the many misrepresentations of the sacred word upon this question, and also to enable them to instruct the children in the correct principles of gospel temperance.

One of the greatest perils to the public health at the present time is undoubtedly the widespread use of tobacco, chewing and smoking, especially by the young. Dr. H. M. Fussell, writing of what he designates as "tobacco heart," says: "Of the cases of heart disease recently treated in the writer's room at the dispensary, nine were diagnosed as functional disorders due to the excessive use of tobacco. All the nine cases occurred in young men between the ages of seventeen and twenty-seven years. The tobacco was used in all the cases in the form of chewing, the amount ranging from half a pound to one pound a week. The habit of chewing was begun early in life in all the cases; in one case at the age of five years; the oldest age noted at which chewing was begun was twelve years; the average was seven years." In each case the treatment included the prescription of "total abstinence from the use of tobacco." In multitudes of cases where functional disorders of the heart do not develop, a morbid appetite is created, craving alcoholic beverages, and with many leading directly to inebriety. Increasingly great is the need of an effective anti-tobacco crusade.
