GENERAL SHERIDAN.

For several months the entire country has been watching for the announcement of the death of General Sheridan. Yesterday the intelligence came that on Sunday the gallant hero of the famous Winchester ride had succumbed to the fell destroyer, gently and peacefully breathing his last at 10:20 A. M. on that day.

Thus one by one the famous generals that led our victorious armies during the dark days of the rebellion are passing away; soon their memory will be all that is left, but that will never die. The immediate cause of Gen. Sheridan's death, according to the doctors' bulletins, was heart failure. The remote cause was disease of the mitral and aortic valves. The complications which have occurred have been nervous exhaustion, pulmonary oedema, anæmia and hemorrhages. He was restless to-day, but not more so than he has been several times since his arrival at Nonquitt. At about 9:30 symptoms of heart failure suddenly appeared. Remedies which had hitherto been successful were vigorously applied, but proved ineffectual and he sank rapidly, dying painlessly at the hour named.

We glean the following biographical abstract: Phillip Henry Sheridan was born in Somerset, Perry county, Ohio; was graduated from the United States military academy and assigned to the first infantry as brevet second lieutenant, July 1, 1853.

After a brief turn in the barracks he was ordered to Texas; transferred to the Pacific coast in 1855, serving in Oregon and Washington territory until the fall of 1861, at which date he was captain of the thirteenth infantry. Recalled to the "States" he was in December assigned to the army of southwest Missouri as chief quartermaster. After the battle of Pea Ridge, March, 1862, he was relieved and in the Corinth campaign accompanied General Halleck as quartermaster until May 25th. On this date he was appointed colonel of the second Michigan cavalry, in which position he served with great distinction.

Upon Grant's promotion to lieutenant general, March, 1864, he applied for the transfer of Sheridan to the East and appointed him chief of the cavalry of the Potomac. On September 20th he was appointed a brigadier general in the regular army. In June 1865, he was placed in command of the military division of the southwest, of that of the gulf in July, of the department of the gulf in August, 1866, and of the fifth military district (Louisiana and Texas) in March, 1867. In September, 1867, he was transferred to the department of the Missouri, continuing in command until March 4, 1869, when he was promoted to lieutenant general and assigned to the command of the division of the Missouri, with headquarters at Chicago. During the political disturbances in 1875 General Sheridan was sent to New Orleans, returning to Chicago on quiet being restored.

During the general's late sickness he was made general of the army, being the third person to hold this important position. The whole country will learn with deep regret the end of this brilliant career.

BATHING contains some information respecting methods of keeping afloat when in the water which those who go sailing without knowing how to swim or to manage a boat would do well to paste in their hats. It says: "It is not generally known that a finger laid upon any floating object, like a log, an overturned boat, or even an ear, will sustain the body in smooth water sufficiently for the head to be kept free for breathing and seeing. Many persons are drowned because they exert themselves wildly when thrown into the water suddenly, yet a boat half-filled with water, or with even little more than the gunwales above the surface, will support as many persons as can get their hands on it, if they behave quietly."

IN THE SOUTH.

Any reference that is made to the condition of affairs, politically, in the Southern States, is taken as very offensive by the Democratic Journals of the north. The cry is usually made that such reference is an exhibition of the old bloody shirt; yet can they explain the facts that are palpable to every observer who glances at election returns? No other section of the Union produces such anomalies as does the solid democratic votes of the south. An eastern paper has recently published a table showing the result of recent elections in nineteen Congressional districts in the Southern States, from which it appears that the colored vote in those districts varied from 13,000 in a South Carolina district to 21,000 in a Georgia district, and yet in all these nineteen districts, in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina, the returns did not show a single Republican vote. In the aggregate the colored vote of these nineteen districts was 315,449, and yet there was not a solitary Republican voter among them. It comes with very bad grace from our democratic brethren of the press, under a state of circumstances shown in the above to cry bloody shirt when an explanation is asked, and the fact of the solid south is alluded to. That there is something rotten in Denmark cannot be denied, and it is well that the rottenness should be looked after before an attempt is made to reform other parts of the body politic of entirely imaginary evils.

The Chicago board of trade seems to be inclined to correct evils that have grown to large dimensions in business transactions in that city. One of them is the practice of gambling in futures in the produce market. Its directors recently censured twenty-nine members for trading in "puts" and "calls." The directors then passed a resolution that any future violations of the rule against "put" and "call" trading would be expelled from the board and their membership certificate forfeited. Several secret committees, consisting of from three to five men each, were appointed to see that the rule is enforced in the future, and the directory has received the assurances of many prominent members that their co-operation could be relied on in putting down illegitimate trading in futures.

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phoebe Chesley, Peterson Clay county Iowa tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouchered for by long residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years, could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." The vicissitudes of climate are trying to most constitutions, especially to people having impure blood. For all such (and they constitute the majority), the best remedy is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the use of which cleanses the blood and strengthens and invigorates the system.
