IS THERE A SHEOL?

The above question is one that forms a subject of considerable discussion with many people. It would seem, from the investigation of a German geologist, a professor in the Heidelberg University, who is spending his vacation in this country, and is examining the natural gas region at Findlay, Ohio, that prospects of a veritable hot place of that description has been found.

Prof. Weissenbauer says he found the gas well country around Findlay greatly underestimated, and that underneath the town of Findlay at great depths lay a mighty cavern filled with inflammable gas under tremendous pressure.

He connected some very delicate telephones with steel rods sunk into the earth through the shaft to the well to a distance far below it. He heard boiling of the rocks, plainly accompanied by cracking sounds. A delicate heat instrument was then connected, and after careful calculations based on its results, he found that a distance of only one mile beneath the great gas cavity which lies under Findlay a fire was raging at a temperature of nearly 3,500 degrees.

No astonished was he at this discovery that he was not disposed to believe that it could be so. Again and again he made the test, always with the same result. Not satisfied with making the observation at one point, he took several within a radius of three miles, and his first observations were completely confirmed. He says that about 1,200 feet below the city of Findlay lies an immense cavern beside which even Mammoth Cave sinks into smallness. It is several miles long and in some places more than half a mile deep. This is crowded full of gas, which is under a pressure almost un conceivable. Then comes several strata of rock, perhaps a mile in thickness, and then this great internal fire, at a temperature of over 3,000 degrees. He says he discovered something of the nature of the strata that lie between the gas cavity and the fires.

It is at first solid rock, impervious and firm. Beneath this lies a great mass of soft and crumbling stone badly formed and full of fissures. Then another layer of considerable thickness, equal to the first in hardness and solidity. The last of these layers, which lies directly over the fires, is melting away. About ten miles from Findlay, on either side, it is of great thickness, but as the town is reached it increases in thinness. The furnace beneath is disintegrating it, and even lessening the barrier between itself and the gas wells.

From the tremendous cracking which is to be heard by means of the second instrument, it is almost certain that the disintegration is going on with great rapidity, and the professor seems to think an early catastrophe not only possible, but probable.

APPARENTLY one of the most uncalculated for votes of President Cleveland, was the one to Senator Dolph's bill giving the city of Tacoma, W. T., the use of a military reservation for a public park. The bill contained the proviso that the reservation was to be preserved intact, and subject to reversion to the government if needed, yet the President vetoed it.

CAPT. JOHN BANKS was recently drowned at Naghead North Carolina, because he persisted in carrying out a cranky notion that it was cowardly to ask for aid; he was seized with cramps while bathing and drowned before his comrades learned his situation, although a single cry for help would have informed them of his situation and saved his life. He preferred to die rather than resign his oddly conceived notions on bravery.

TO FENCE OR NOT TO FENCE

That is the question that sooner or later, every agriculturist in the country will discuss with a full appreciation of all of the advantages and disadvantages. The husbandman says: "Unnecessary fences are expensive property. The cost of building is no small amount, and besides being a heavy tax on their owners to keep in repair they occupy valuable land and are the most prolific breeding place for briars and noxious weeds. As expensive nuisances they are only excelled by worthless dogs." Which is all true. The fashion has so interwoven itself into the farming operations of the country, however, that every one deems it almost an impossibility to dispense with the enormous expense of fencing in every cultivated acre of land, for the purpose of keeping the growing crops from being destroyed by the live stock, not stopping to take into consideration that the live stock could be confined within fenced inclosures at considerably less than one-half of the expense of the present method of fencing the live stock out of the growing crops. The subject forms a question worthy of consideration.

The California G. A. R. encampment opened at Anaheim, in that state, yesterday. It is expected that 7000 people will be in attendance, and a regular tenting on the (imaginary) old camp ground will be the role of proceedings.

The Seattle Iron works, it is said, will open upon a contract to furnish 20,000 tons of steel rails for the Lake Shore and Eastern Railroad.
