CO-OPERATION.

There are very many who object to the movement of the laboring class of community, which comes under the head of co-operation, and which at present is receiving much attention and being rapidly adopted and spread. It is really the working man's means of protecting his independence, and giving him his proper influence in the body politic. The Westminster Review in discussing the subject says that the chief interest and importance of the co-operative movement lies in the prospect it holds out of making the workers independent of capitalists—not of course, of capital. There is a weak point in mere distributive co-operation which Lasalle pointed out. Anything which enables working-men to make their wages go further, so that they enjoy a larger real reward, leads, as soon as it becomes general, to a corresponding fall in money wages. There may be counteracting causes, the most effective of which is, probably, the adoption of a higher standard of living by the wage-earners. But the danger is a real one, and if working-men co-operators desire to avoid, or at least to minimize it, they will aim at making themselves independent of capitalists. The first condition of effecting this is that working-men shall find their own capital, and so become their own employers. But they must also find their own market. That is their weak point, and it is there the capitalist will attack them. The vast wealth, and the power of combination possessed by capitalists, would enable them to trade at a loss for an indefinite time, and to offer at less than cost-price the commodities made by co-operators, and for which co-operators must get a fair price or starve. Thus they could drive co-operators out of every market in which purchasers consulted only their own immediate individual advantage—that is to say, out of all ordinary markets. This they would undoubtedly do if once alarmed. The only hope for the working-men's association in that case is that their fellow-working-men will stand by them, and say they will buy working-men's goods at fair price rather than the capitalist's goods at a temporary reduction. Nor is the success of these working-men's association a matter which concerns the working classes only. Even capitalist employers may well wish them moderate and gradual success, lest a worse thing befall themselves. Socialism has made and is making great strides. Its motive-power is the very self-same grievance which co-operators are trying to remove. But its aims are more ambitious and its methods are violent and revolutionary. Co-operative production, if it succeeds and becomes general, will remove gradually and peacefully the grievance on which all that is morally strongest in socialism is based. Co-operation in all its branches is winning for the poor all that is best in socialism, without presenting one single ugly feature to alarm society as at present constituted. Socialism hates capitalists, co-operation aims at multiplying them and if it hopes to reduce the rewards of employers and their power over the destinies of working-men, it will also give improved security for capital. Socialism would confiscate private capital; co-operation hires it and pays it fully for its use. What ever may be thought of socialism as merely co-operation deserves the encouraging words of the bishop of Bedford: "A blessed and a laudable work, and it shall have as its reward."

LABOR'S INTERESTS THE COUNTRY'S.

The wealthy importers who are largely free-traders because it would inevitably increase their importations and profits for a time at least would do well to reflect upon the patriotic sentiments uttered by Mr. H. K. Thurber, of the great importing firm of Thurber, Wyland & Co., in his recent letter to the wage-earners of the United States. Mr. Thurber says: "Free trade is a very pretty theory but it is mainly professional men who advocate it, and it is gratifying to some to preach 'that all the world are brothers' and that consequently we should not protect the labor of our own neighbors, our own citizens, who build our towns into villages, our villages into cities, who consume our own raw products. Free trade may be charity to foreign operatives, but I for one believe that charity begins at home first; that my own country is entitled to my first regard, the interest of the wage-earner of this country is my interest, that his success is my success. I also believe that what European manufacturers want us to do is not for our interest to do. When every European hailed President Cleveland's message with delight as tending toward free trade it convinced me that it was not the best interest of this country that he should be re-elected."

The friendly attitude toward the labor movement which has been manifested by the Thurbers for many years adds significance to this unqualified declaration against Cleveland's free trade conspiracy.
