THE CHAMPION CANARD.

A Report That Cleveland Will Not Run.

PHILADELPHIA, August 14.—The Evening Item, this afternoon prints, with double leads, a report that a private letter was received in Philadelphia from Washington to-day, and written by a well-known Democratic leader, conveying the startling but evidently well-authenticated information that President Cleveland's long delayed letter will decline the nomination tendered him at St. Louis. The letter goes on to say that the President has been astounded at the protection feeling exhibited in the good old Democratic party since the Mills bill was passed, and that he fears a disruption in the party ranks of such magnitude that that another setback of twenty-years would ensue if he went before the country on that issue. For him to hedge while under fire would never do, and the only way to save his party from overwhelming defeat is to withdraw and reconvene the convention in the interest of a new candidate, with a pronounced protection record.

How a Sultan Lives.

Despite the civilized attempts of the French, life in the royal palace of Hue continues unchanged. The King's harem is composed of 100 women, who are recruited chiefly from the daughter of functionaries. Once within the palace they cease all communication with their families and become, so to speak, prisoners. They are divided into nine classes of ranks, and are fed and clothed at the expense of the state. Those belonging to the first class receive yearly 500 ligatures (7 ligatures are equal to 75 cents), 250 business office and 48 pieces of silk; they have each 10 servants. The queen receives 1,000 ligatures, 300 bushels of rice and 40 pieces of silk. The King's mother strange to say, is allowed more than the queen. She receives 10,000 ligatures, 1,000 bushels of rice and presents of all kinds in the shape of clothing and jewelry. The king is attended daily by a number of women, chosen from all the ranks of the harem. Thirty of them mount guard at the doors of his majesty's private apartments. Five are attached constantly to his person. It is these who have charge of his toilet. They dress him, perfume him, pair his long nails and attend on him at the table. Thinking takes three meals a day. Each comprises fifty dishes, prepared by fifty cooks. The dishes are borne to the door of the dining room by the cooks, who hand them over to the women on duty, for no males are permitted to enter the royal apartments. His majesty drinks, as a rule, a peculiar kind of scented spirit especially distilled for him, but occasionally, on the advice of the doctors, he takes a little Bordeaux wine. The quantity of rice eaten by his Majesty is always the same; it is measured and weighed, but should his appetite fail off, and he be unable to consume the prescribed amount, then the doctors are called in to prescribe remedies, of which they will have to partake themselves before the king will touch them. His Majesty, it appears, is a hard worker, notwithstanding his effeminacy. He rises at five o'clock and goes to bed at eight. All the affairs of the country pass through his hands. At regular periods he makes a tour of his domains to see how his subjects are getting on, and to redress their grievances, should they have any. In short he appears to be the paragon of a monarch.

Results of the scientific tests of the Officer Meissel's new invention, an oil rocket designed to calm the raging of a troubled sea, appear to have been satisfactory enough to warrant the hope that shipwrecks will be rare occurrences ere many years. The principle here applied is as old, certainly, as the proverb which embodies it, but the method of application was novel. Four rockets, the same in appearance as those commonly used in ordinary pyrotechnical displays, but with the exploding cap removed and a light cylinder holding one pound of train oil substituted, were sent up at varying angles of projection, the result being that the sea was calmed for thousands of feet round about the spot above which they exploded and fell. The oil spread into a thin, silk-like sheet, which, extending rapidly, appeared to have the power of keeping the waves within peaceable limits. As these rockets can be carried with convenience and sent up without trouble, there is no reason surely why the enterprising steamship companies should not at once recognize their utility and add a number to the equipment of each steamer sufficient for the necessities of the average voyage. Officer Meissel's cylinder is a simple affair and can be made to hold as much oil as may be desired, through the center of the oil runs a small tube containing two ounces of gunpowder, which ignites as soon as the motive power of the rocket is spent, and exploding, scatters the oil in a fine spray over the water. The action of the oil upon the water is almost instantaneous.—Philadelphia Times.
