PLAIN TALK ON WOOL.

Governor Charles H. Sawyer of New Hampshire, who is a manufacturer of woolen goods, seems to have thought out the wool question to a notch above that usually reached by the ordinary debater on the proposition. Governor Sawyer says that with wool on the free list he would be able to buy his raw material cheaper, but that in the long run it would not be to his advantage, as in the end our workingmen would have to be paid lower wages and free wool would mean the total destruction of the wool-raising industry in this country.

That is the proposition in a nutshell. Mr. Cleveland's tariff, as crystallized in the Mills bill, would undoubtedly reduce the price of wool to the American manufacturers, at least for a time; for, as Mr. Wise said in December, we cannot compete with cheap labor and cheaper ranges abroad; but the result would certainly be to put wages on the European level and to ruin the wool-raising industry of the United States, and then where should we be?

Our free-trade contemporaries lose sight of the fact that if foreign wool-growers can once obtain a monopoly of the American market they will recoup themselves very speedily for the duties which they —not the consumer, but they— have been compelled to pay as the premium for being allowed to compete with the home product, and that with such a monopoly once established it would take years of a protective tariff to break it down.

The problem is just this: Is it better to protect the wool-growers, the workman and the consumer, or to benefit the manufacturer, and that for a brief period? The tariff helps the first three, free trade would benefit only the last named. Which will the people of the United States choose?

THE sins that the republican platform and party have to answer for—according to the representations of opposing organs—are numerous and wonderful to behold. It, by these very voracious journals, is convicted of advocating free whisky, simply because it suggests just what the leading temperance men have claimed should be done for years, the repeal of the revenue tax; it is saddled with the odium of pauper immigration, though who but a thoroughly prejudiced partisan could see any connection between protecting American labor and the contract of shipping by foreign countries of their pauper laborers here, is hard to conceive of; it is blamed with making the working of "trust"— an operation that is neither affeted by protection or free trade and owes its entire existence to personal greed and connivance, irrespective of party or politics— possible, and the diabolical results of the working of those modern molochs laid at its door. These and various other heinous sins are placed upon it by the opposing journals, and, by the same hypothesis, if an early frost should come and destroy a portion of the growing crop, the republican party or platform would be responsible for it. Or, if an earthquake should visit the country, devastating its fair borders the republican party would be responsible for it, or if a lightning stroke should strike a church steeple and set the weathervane in the wrong quarter, the republican party would be responsible for it; ad libitum, ad infinitum, ad nauseum. Gentlemen, find some semblance of truthfulness in your assertions, &c. oundation for your accusations, before indulging farther in the earsplitting ye-haws of free whiskey, "trusts" and "pauper immigration," republican produced measures under a democratic administration.

THE Tacoma Ledger sizes up the late woman suffrage decision of the Washington Territory, supreme court, in the following terse language: "It required much language to put the views of the court in shape. This decision illustrates one of the beauties of a republican form of government in a territory. The courts, not the people, makes the laws. The people, through their fairly elected representatives, said that women might vote. The supreme court says they may not vote. The court is on top and the people submit. If the democratic party had been honest and loyal enough to admit this territory into the union as a state the woman suffrage law made by the people would now be in force."
