

HARRY BURTON.

turning to that horrible scene in the library, when she cries out that she is her murderer. She calls with every endearing epithet for him to come back to her, to speak just one little comforting word to make one little sign that he loves her, and forgives her. And her aunt Mrs. Desmond alternates between hysterics and days of prostration, and is a general nuisance to everybody. She is so nervous and excitable that the doctor has forbidden her to enter Pearl's room. She has put on the deepest mourning and to every one coming in she puts her bit of handkerchief to her eyes, and sobs out that her darling Pearl will soon follow her father and that she will be doubly bereaved, that they were her only remaining relatives on earth.
