

HARRY BURTON

message from you. His eyes would be as bright as stars when I would come in, and though he wouldn't ask I would know he was all impatience for me to tell him that you were getting better, and that sent some little message to him, and it nearly killed me to disappoint him; for then the brightness would die out of his eyes, and I couldn't get him to take any interest in anything. The tears were rolling down Pearl's face as the Captain talked.

"And you say you brought messages from him to me every day? Then why did I not receive them? I was ill, very ill for a long time and they did not tell me anything of what happened after that day—that awful time in the library. At the memory of that terrible scene she clasped her hands before her eyes as if to shut out a horrible sight. Shuddering she made an effort to proceed. "But after the trial I overheard the servants talking of it, and they compelled them to tell me everything; then I determined to get well; but then I did not care; but then I felt I must live to help and comfort Harry. It is, or was my intention to go to the Governor, and beg of him for Harry's pardon. I was going there to-day, but I wanted to see Harry first. Oh, Captain I have begged and pleaded to come to see him, but my aunt would not let me. When I heard this morning that he was sentenced to die, I think I should have died if I had not come. I disguised myself and slipped out through the kitchen and walked down to the street, where I hired a cab to bring me here. And to think he has gone, thinking me false and heartless."

"No, no; not that. I think he only thought you believed him guilty. It was that idea I worked on to win his consent to my plans for escape. He had given up all hope, and I had to talk like a lawyer, I tell you. I worked on his gratitude to me, and his love for you; I made him believe he owed it to me to prove his innocence."

"It never once entered my mind that he was guilty," answered Pearl, feelingly. "I would stake my life on his innocence were the evidence twice as convincing as it is now."

Caution to Mothers.

Every mother is cautioned against giving her child laudanum or paregoric; it creates an unnatural craving for stimulants which kills the mind or the child. Acker's Baby Sooter is specially prepared to benefit children and cure their pains. It is harmless and contains no opium or morphine. Sold by Foshy & Mason.
