CORPORATIONS.

In considering the subject of corporate powers it is well enough to remember the advantages that accrue from them as well as the evils that have grown into use through their organization and operation. A cursory view of the situation will convince any observer that our advance civilization and unexampled and prosperous growth comes in reality from the results of the work of corporations. could not exist without them; our entirely upon them, and even the as it is in that church. Upon the principal sources of our learning ignorance of the masses of the and knowledge lies within their membership is such dominance sphere of action.

It will easily be seen that they have so completely grown into the Salem are earnest in the matter of web and woof of our existence, both personal and national, that they are essential for life and prosperity, for our future growth and a lyancement, and in working out the problem of their future position and power in the body politic, all of this should be fully taken cognizance of.

Of course it is essential also that it be remembered, that corporations are perpetual in existence practically speaking-and therefore not subject to the mutations of time for the corrections of evils, or the righting of wrongs; that child of its peculiar troubles by using they are swaved by neither com- Acker's Baby Soother. Address all commubeen truthfully remarked, they are without souls; that their power if unlimited by legislative action is despotic and selfish in the extreme for success is the goal to which all O the ace of clubs, quarter circle over it on corporations aim to attain, irrespective of obstacles in the path-

In dealing with them, then, it becomes necessary to carefully and fully consider every aspect and condition of the subject, and to use justice and equity to all parties concerned. That legislative action is and will be continually necessary in the regulation and control of corporate power is without question a fact; and it is a fact that legislators will find the most persistent and difficult of all the questions trey have to act upon to be this

Is it possible to reach perfection in anything, is a question that will o ten present itself. The student, Ed. Zeyss and G.
