The dry cold weather of the early winter months is productive of a great deal of croup among children.

Mothers should be on the lookout for it, and be prepared to arrest it as soon as the first symptoms appear. True croup never comes without a warning: a day or two before the attack the child will become hoarse, and all symptoms are soon followed by a peculiar, rough cough. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is given as soon as this hoarseness or cough appears, all danger and anxiety may be avoided; it has never failed, even in the most severe cases. There is no danger in giving the Remedy for it contains no injurious substance. For sale by Foshay & Mason.

Wanted in the End.

Is it not better to nip Consumption in the bud, than to try to stay its progress on the brink of the grave? A few doses of California's most useful production, will relieve, and a thorough treatment will cure. Nasal Catarrh, too often the forerunner of consumption can be cured by California Cat-R-Cure. GENERAL NEWS.

Congressional Action Concerning the Samoan Trouble.

Secretary Bayard's Statement. He Thinks America Has No Chance of War—President Cleveland's Attitude—Eastern News.

THE HERALD SPECIAL DISPATCHES.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—It was reported this morning that the president would to-day send to congress a communication on the Samoan question. Inquiry at the White House elicits the statement that the report concerning the message is untrue. In an interview, published at Baltimore this morning, Secretary Bayard says that Germany has given this country no casus belli, that our flag has not been insulted or a American property destroyed, and the whole question is, shall this country assert independence of Samoa by force of arms if need be against German aggression? As this involved the question of peace or war, the determination of which rests with congress, the whole subject has been referred to that body, the president not feeling authorized to take further steps, which might precipitate hostilities.

The latter acknowledged in a correspondence that he had another wife in Dunedin, New Zealand. Both wives have children by him. He seems to excuse himself on the ground that he believed his New Zealand wife dead.

DESCRIPTION OF THE BLUEBERRY

The blueberry is a valuable fruit and is reliable grow in our Northern states, where the more tender varieties of fruits winter-kill. It is perfectly hardy, having stood 40 degrees below zero without showing any injury to the plant. It is native to this latitude about the first of July, and is borne in clusters like currants; shape, round; color, reddish purple at first, but becomes a bluish black when fully ripened. The flavor is equal to the raspberry, a very mild rich sub-acid, pronounced by most people delicious. It may be served with sugar and cream or cooked sauce, and is splendid canned for winter use. The plant seems to flourish in all soils and is a prolific bearer. It grows very stocky and makes a nice hedge. The shining dark green leaves and the blue fruit making a pleasing contrast. The demand for the fruit is great, and usually brings 15 cents per quart. The second and third year after setting out, they are propagated from suckers and root cuttings. The plant is about the height and size of a currant bush and very stocky, holding the fruit well up from the ground. Plants should be set in the spring, during March, April and May, in rows two or three feet apart, and five or six feet between the rows, making a perfect hedge, and no grass or weeds should be allowed to grow between rows.

MALFORD'S COURTSHIP.

An Awkward Position in its Early Stages.

Indianapolis Corr. New York World. The sudden prominence of Elijah Halford, the President-elect's private secretary, recalls a story of his youthful days. It occurred when he first started into society. Even private secretaries of Presidents sometimes have disagreeable adventures of this early, but interesting period of their lives. It is of no little moment to get a fellow's courage up to the point of calling upon a girl for the first time. It takes a brave heart when everything goes smoothly, and when there are breakers ahead in the way of opposition by the parents it takes the grit of a soldier to be successful. If there is anything inclined to ruffle the tender sensibilities of a young man it is to have a thoughtless parent insist that he is too young to call upon his daughter and that she is too young to receive his attentions. It was thus that they sought to crush the youthful Halford. He wasn't crushed, however. At every attempt he bobbed up bigger than before.

About this time the family went to the neighboring town of Bloomington to spend a week. The young lady remained at home. During their absence Major J. B. Mulky, an old friend of the family was called to Indianapolis on business, and the parents of the girl told him to be sure to go around and spend the evening with their daughter. "She would be lonely," they said. "They were mistaken, however. She was not lonely. Neither was Halford. A joint couple could not have been found when the bell rang at 8:30 o'clock that evening, but the cold chills chased up and down his spine when she said: "Oh, what is that shroul to be pa and ma!" They wouldn't stop in the parlor long if it was so, so after a few moments' consultation Halford was securely hidden behind a high-backed divan which stood across the corner of the room.

The door was opened, but it wasn't pa and ma. It was Mulky who ambled in and condescended himself the cozy divan and informed the young lady that he had come to fulfill his promise to her parents to help her pass away the long evening. The thermometer was in the nineties, and the Major often referred to the fact as he mopped his manly brow. It was hot for Mulky, what was the state of the thermometer for Halford? He was hotter than he was at the Gresham men in the Chicago convention. Mr. Halford was a devout Methodist, but was not accustomed to remain upon his knees for hours continuously. Hence it was fortunate that Mulky occupied the divan, for the prisoner could occasionally rise and get a breath of air and the benefit of a fan with which the thoughtful young lady had provided her caller.

After one glimpse of Halford's face she opened all the doors and windows and gave Mulky a larger fan than ever. He waved it unceasingly and was probably thus instrumental in preserving Halford's life, for which service he will doubtless expect an appointment. To resume—the major carried on the principal part of the conversation unaided. He talked over the political situation and of his own inspirations in that direction. He then took up the subject of chess—at which game he is an expert—and told her of his various victories, entering into the details and intricacies of this sprightly and fascinating game.

Meanwhile, in order to keep his blood circulating and obtain air, Halford moved carefully and noiselessly about like a caged lion and arose and felt like a Roman Emperor in his efforts.

At 9:30 the visitor arose and said he regretted he could not remain longer. The young lady joined him in regret, but the one who regretted most of all was Halford. He regretted that he could not get from behind from the divan and there and wipe up the earth with him. The Major bowed himself out and Halford was released and revived. Afterward when he informed some intimate friends of the incident and observed that those were the longest two hours he had ever passed upon this terrestrial globe, they believed him.

ELECTRICITY IN MEDICINE.

BY DR. D. M. JONES.

It was not until within the last few years that electricity has received anything like the attention it merited from the medical profession. To be sure scientists experimented, and a few of the more inquiring among the medical men gave shocks of static electricity, which were at times shockingly barbarous, and too often shockingly injurious. Fortunately for the good name of the profession, as well as for suffering humanity, this cruel treatment has been abolished and instead of painful shocks of electricity a pleasant and invigorating flow of the same is made to permeate a part or the whole of the system as the case requires.

The profession had long felt the need of some remedy better suited to certain forms of disease than was to be found in the materia medica, and it was at length discovered in electricity in one or the other of its forms. By its intelligent use the blind have been made to see, the deaf to hear and the sick restored to health. It is not my purpose to belittle the administration of medicines when they ought to be given, but to set forth electricity as a remedy too frequently neglected, a remedy that when all others fail comes to our aid and effects a cure.

In skillful hands it can be applied to the most sensitive organization and to children of tender age. It imparts tone and vigor to enfeebled organs and strengthens the most nervous and debilitated constitutions. Of all our investigations into the mysteries of nature none have been more beneficial, none more wonderful and astounding in their results than those which have arisen from the study of electricity. And yet electricity as a great healing agent is in its infancy.
