YACUINA BAY CODFISH.

A Correspondent Has Something to Say Upon That Subject—Incidental Comments.

The Yaquina Deep Sea Fishing Company may not be aware of the fact that in 1868, one Daniel Russell of Down Easter, employed a number of young Indians belonging to the tribe of Sixes, at that time residing near Seal Rocks, to catch codfish. This man cured the fish after the manner of curing codfish elsewhere. With the slow and uncertain method of fishing in the ocean from small canoes, always subject to delay, owing to the roughness of the water, these few Indians, less than a dozen, managed to catch between one and two tons of codfish. Lish Appligate, when told of this, remarked, "How do you know the fish were codfish?" I said they look like cod, tasted like cod, sold readily at the ruling price for cod, and smelt like codfish, and Lish in that inimitable style, said he had always considered the order of codfish its distinctive characteristic. I have often, since that day seen Indians come into the bay after a few hours' fishing off the bar, with canoe loads of fish, more than half of which would be distinctively codfish. I have never doubted, these fish were "strays" from the bank south southwest of Yaquina bay.

R. A. BENDEL. The Yaquina Deep Sea Fishing Company are doubtless aware of the existence of codfish on the banks off Yaquina bay; also that rockcod, flounders, herring, and other varieties of fish are plentiful there.

But there are codfish and codfish and one variety is known as the "cultus" cod, which grows to a great size and has the appearance, odor and other distinctive characteristics of the true cod, and notwithstanding its name is a very good fish. This is the kind generally seen in the market here coming from Yaquina, though in a box of fish there are sometimes samples of half a dozen species of cod. The regular old-fashioned Eastern cod, so dear to the hearts of all "Down Easters," has been sent to this market from Puget sound and from off the mouth of the Columbia, but none have come here this year.

Every fishing ground off this coast is a mine of undeveloped wealth, where fish are so crowded that they haven't room to be comfortable, and are just begging for someone to come along and thin them out. The Yaquina Deep Sea Fishing Company propose to do this, and they will soon find out how many kinds of fish there are in the Yaquina fishing banks.—Oregonian.

HELD TO ANSWER.

A. T. Thompson Bond Over in $500 Bonds—Witness Also Held.

The defendant was held to await the action of the grand jury, his bonds being reduced to $500. The prosecuting witness Geo. Sparrell, was also held in $100 bonds for his appearance.

Clark, who struck Thompson over the head with a shovel is still in a critical condition, and is unable to appear in court. It is likely he will recover.

Robbing the Mails.

John L. Allen a waiter in Pearce & May's restaurant at Salem was arrested Sunday evening for robbing the mail of a registered letter containing $10. The first known of Allen is as a porter on a Pullman on the Southern Pacific to Deming, Arizona; for some reason unknown to the postal department he left this job and came to Ashland Oregon, about the last of November or first of December where he remained a short time. After leaving Ashland he came to Woodville, a small station also in Jackson county, where he stopped at a small hotel kept by Mrs. Stanley, who is postmistress and keeps the office in the hotel. He presented himself, through letters in his possession and otherwise, as a detective of the Wells, Fargo & Co., looking up the recent robberies on the Southern Pacific railroad. He remained at Woodville about two weeks. On or about the 18th of December he rifled a registered letter containing $10, that had just been sealed up by Mrs. Stanley and left it lying on the table while she attended to her housework. He revealed the letter and it went to its destination at Toke before the theft was discovered. The case was reported to the department and the inspectors commenced on the case immediately. Inspector Treuteau was at Woodville Saturday looking up the matter and was going down to Portland Sunday morning intending to placard all the valley towns, but upon inquiring of a Salem man on the train he learned that a person of the name and description he wanted was in Salem, so he proceeded to Portland came back with Deputy Marshal Wait and made the arrest. He was taken to Portland for trial.

Another Finger Cut Off.

Geo. Randall, while working in Dillon & Co.'s furniture factory on Monday had a finger cut off in a buzz saw. He had the wound dressed and yesterday went back to work. He had been at work but a short time when his hand became too familiar with the saw again and another finger dropped off. He is now estimating how long the remainder of his fingers will last if he continues to monkey with a buzz saw.
