THE CIVILIZING ELEMENT.

The great factors in pushing forward the civilization of the nations of the earth, are inter communication and the coming of the people together—the creating and maintenance of common interests that causes rapid and constant exchange of ideas and thoughts, and relations of peaceful comity and kindly feeling.

Towards these ends the leading means are trade and commerce, and the more extended a nations interests are in that direction the more rapid strides it makes in the expansions of its higher civilization. Among the nations and people that naturally should be co-workers with our nation in the marts of trade and exchange are the dwellers in our neighboring South American principalities.

Just at present those countries bordering upon the isthmus are in a deplorable condition. From that condition may grow relationship that will be advantageous both to them and us. An exchange says that in connection with the distressing condition of affairs in Central America there comes a suggestion showing the disposition of minor American States to recognize the controlling influence of this country in American affairs.

The suspension of work on the Panama Canal has thrown thousands of persons out of employment, paralyzed business, and produced a very serious financial crisis. Public meetings have been held, the Chamber of Commerce of Panama has discussed the situation, and the government authorities have been trying to discover some mode of relief, but no way out of their troubles has yet been found, and a dispatch from Panama says the people have about concluded that the only hope of alleviation lies in the direction of the congress of representatives of the American republics, to be held at Washington next October, which will discuss the question of a standard currency for all the American nations.

A standard currency for all American nations would mean closer commercial relations, and the fact that Central Americans are looking to it as a means of financial relief shows they are beginning to realize the importance of closer trade relations with the Great Republic. This is one of the most important subjects that can engage the attention of our government.

Some of the states of South America are developing very rapidly, and the trade of that region is becoming more valuable and desirable every year. At present it is practically controlled by European nations which, by outwitting us in business and diplomacy, have captured a trade that naturally belongs to us. The time is rapidly approaching when the augmented populations and highly developed resources of the southern continent will produce a development of commerce that the United States may well strive to attract to themselves instead of supinely permitting to be diverted by other nations.

Without doubt the adoption of a standard currency, as suggested, would lead to an acceleration of trade interests, and thus help to bind the nation closer together and produce the desired results.

N. Dolph, who is a student at Princeton College, with four other students visited a neighboring town where they were subjected to arrest on the charge of disorderly conduct and young Dolph was brutally assaulted with a policeman's club. The justice however discharged the young men from custody. Schoolboys are apt to get into a great many pranks.

The Railway Age says the practice of shipping corpses in baggage cars upon first-class tickets had become so common and is so objectionable in various ways that many of the railways are anxious to be relieved from this traffic, and the General Passenger Agents' Association has before it for consideration at its next meeting a resolution that whenever a corpse is offered for transportation the person in charge shall be referred to the express company doing service on the road and the railway agent shall decline to receive the body for transportation.

In all probability the farmer who plants a goodly patch of potatoes, this season, will reap a rich harvest. Potatoes have been so extremely plentiful that they have fallen in price until there is no market for them, and in consequence the farmers are turning their attention to other crops. California farmers are planting largely of beans. Therefore the farmer who does raise potatoes is likely next fall to find a market for them.
