Different Points of View.

Sheffield Telegraph.

A minister, with a rather florid complexion, had gone into the shop of a barber, one of his parishioners, to be shaved. The barber was addicted to heavy bouts of drinking, after which his hand was consequently unsteady at his work. In shaving the minister on the occasion referred to he inflicted a cut sufficiently deep to cover the lower part of his face with blood. The minister turned to the barber and said, in a tone of solemn severity: "You see, Thomas, what comes of taking to much drink." "Aye," replied Thomas, "it makes the skin verra tenner."

A Queer Question.

New York Sun.

"Which of the great characters of old would you like to marry?" This is the question that was brought under debate the other night in the Blank Society, and half a dozen members of both sexes indicated their choice, and the reason for it. One bold man of mature years and martial experience selected Xantippe as the woman of his preference; another selected Cleopatra, and a third the Queen of Sheba. Of the three ladies, one made the choice of Sampson, another of Hercules, and a third Job. The question will be further debated, and every member of both sexes belonging to the society is to be required to make a choice of a life partner from the great characters in history.

Expensive Telegraphing.

The Chinese Minister at Washington expends more money in telegrams and cable dispatches than the Government of the United States. In communicating with the Chinese Government he makes use of a cipher, but as his dispatches cost $4 a word, his bills are enormous. His expenditures in telegraphing reach an average of $1000 a week. One day, recently, he spent $2000 in sending dispatches to China regarding the Milwaukee riots. His cable messages to China go to Havre, from there to Aden, then across the Arabian Sea, through Hindustan and Siam, to Pekin.

It is no good to look at the thermometer this year to judge of winter. The only thing to guide you is Brownell & Stanard's prices, which are always down to zero.

A BRAVE ENGINEER.

Mr. F. M. Redfield, of this city, is in receipt of a copy of the Springfield (Vt.) Reporter, which contains an account of the brave manner in which his cousin, L. C. Redfield, met his death in the recent railroad accident on the Georgia Midland and Gulf road. He had been engineer on the road for about thirty years. The Vermont paper recounts the affair as follows:

When the engine left the iron the train was moving at full speed. Ahead, not a great way off, was a fifty foot tresle, from which the train would inevitably have been precipitated if reached. The brave engineer, L. C. Redfield, and his fireman, Walter Mahone, realized the danger which confronted them and the human freight depending on them to avert it. That they faced it manfully, heroically, entitles them to be at least held in grateful memory by all who owed anything to their noble sacrafice.

The might have saved themselves at any moment from the discovery of the accident up to the time of the fatal plunge of the engine. They remained at their post, coolly and skilfully using every effort to bring the train to a stop before the trestle was reached. When the nose of the engine was almost upon the trestle the train was saved, but the engine toppled over and tumbled down the embankment, turning completely over. The engineer was frightfully injured and lived but a short time. The fireman was not so seriously injured, and it was thought might recover.

The brave engineer, who so manfully and heroically faced an awful death rather than abandon his post of duty, had done everything that a long practice and experience could suggest to shut down the engine. The reverse lever was thrown back in the last notch in the backward motion, the throttle of the engine was wide open and the air brakes were tight on the driving wheels. He could do nothing more. And though the terrible death of Engineer Redfield is deeply deplored by the entire community, without doubt his heroism and bravery in defense of his train and her precious cargo will be written on the sands of time in this section down to the future ages.

Manufacture of Sugar.

H. W. Wiley, chemist of the department of agriculture, has made a report on his recent experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum. The territory in which sorghum can be successfully grown, according to Mr. Wiley, does not extend as far north as Oregon, consequently, it is not probable that the production of this cane for sugar will ever become one of Oregon's industries. From the report it appears that the Indian territory, if it were in possession of the whites, would be the center of the sorghum growing region. It is doubtful if the Indians will ever do anything in this direction.

It is not impossible for Oregon to become a sugar producing state. The sugar beet is as safe a reliance for the production of sugar as sorghum, and there is little doubt but the beet can be successfully cultivated in different parts of this state. The recent offer made by Claus Spreckles to establish an extensive sugar factory any place on the Pacific coast where 5000 acres will be devoted to the raising of the sugar beet, has received some attention from Eastern Oregon farmers, and if the experiments which it is said will be made with the beet should prove successful, the manufacture of sugar in this state may become an industry of no little importance.
