PROTECTION AT THE SOUTH

At Birmingham, Alabama, recently a meeting of Southern gentlemen, who are in favor of protecting and fostering the manufacturing interests of the South, was held, for the purpose of organizing for work in that direction.

An eastern exchange says of these gentlemen: "They saw the industries of the South developing in a way that they would never have developed under a free-trade policy. It was recognized by many Southerners that the continuance of the protective policy was absolutely necessary for the South. Nevertheless the men who recognized this fact continued to vote with the party that favors the protective policy of free trade. They were protectionists in theory and free traders in practice. Their race prejudices divorced their practice from their theory. The men who called the Birmingham convention, knowing that it is useless to attempt to argue against a deep-rooted prejudice, have determined to make the protection party in the south essentially a white man's party. They do this in the hope that they will thereby secure a respectful hearing for protection arguments from Southerners who up to this time have been so swayed by their dislike of the negro that they have been unwilling to give a hearing to protectionists who have been in political affiliation with the negroes.

There is nothing in the resolutions passed in the Birmingham convention that would indicate that the new protection party in the South is in any way opposed to the negro. It simply does not want the black man to occupy too prominent position in the ranks of the new party for the reason already given. We believe the intelligent colored men of the South will recognize the wisdom of this. In this way the negro will find his condition considerably bettered. Thus sharing the benefit of the policy of protection the negroes in the South will in course of time occupy a higher position than they do now. In the meantime the race prejudices will be considerably modified, if not entirely wiped out. Such a happy solution of the negro question cannot be looked forward to if through the triumph of free trade principles the South should remain an agricultural country without diversified industries.

Southern labor employed exclusively in tilling the soil means low wages and low wages mean the continuation of the poverty and its concomitant evils that have made it next to impossible for the negro to exercise his rights of citizenship in a way to secure for himself all the benefits that it was intended he should enjoy when the national government conferred those rights on him.

In an obscure corner of New Mexico the rigors of lenten piety present a phase more severe than anything else probably in the world. Near the village of San Mateo is the dwindled relic of a sect of fanatics known as "Los Hermanos Penitentes" (The Penitent Brothers), whose austere practices have long since been condemned by the Catholic church. They are simple Mexicans whose ordinary pursuits are forsaken during lent for daily religious processions in which they stagger beneath the weight of enormous crosses, or flagellate themselves with the stinging buck-horn cactus, winding their agonizing way under the lead of a dismal file to an extemporized calvary, where, on Good Friday, one of their number is crucified. They are seclusive fanatics, hiding their austerities from the world, but an enterprising writer has studied and photographed their eccentric penances, and his article, accompanying illustrations for the first time made public, will appear in the May Cosmopolitan.

It is now stated on good authority that the government of Colombia will refuse to extend the concess-sions to the DeLesseps company, for the extension of the time for completing the Panama Canal. The time expires in 1892 and it is utterly impossible to complete the work in that time and of course the action of Colombia will be to entirely hinder any further prosecution of the work by European agencies. It is understood that it is the wish of the Colombian government that the United States should take up the uncompleted job, but our country thinks there are cheaper and better routes for a canal than the Panama one. The action mentioned is a complete application of the Monroe doctrine however.

HUMAN beings are never satisfied but are continually seeking after something just beyond present attainment. Railway speed counts as nothing when compared to aerial navigation. An exchange says that navigation of the air is exciting a good deal of attention in Chicago, and a company has been formed to build an airship. The invention on which the sanguine stockholders base their hopes is that of Dr. DeBaussett, but it has not yet been tested. It utilizes compressed air, and its promoters believe that they will have their airship in working order before the end of the year, but the skeptical heavily discount these prophecies. The chief believer in the scheme in Chicago is a skirtmaker who has become an enthusiast in aerial navigation.
