L. W. CLARK'S SUICIDE.

A Former Resident of Albany, Blows His Brains Out—A Forewell Letter.

L. W. Clark, formerly a well known photographer of this city, who less than three months ago was married to Mrs. Mary Moore, also of this city, committed suicide in Portland Sunday, while his wife was absent at church, by shooting himself in the head with a revolver. The following letter was found in his pocket:

To My Dear Wife, Mollie: Oh! what shall I say to you in excuse for all the trouble I have been or shall make you. If I could only go out of your life without leaving an unpleasant recollection I should be so glad. The act which I am about to commit is one which I am, as you know, contemplated at intervals for years, and I am so certain that I shall sometime die by my own hand that I feel the sooner it is over the better for both, for, dear Mollie, I am not worthy of you and you shall not have to live with a man who cannot make you happy the rest of your life.

I have made such a sad failure in management for the last two months that I am disheartened. Were it not for this horrible dread of the future I could be so happy with you, for you are so patient with my variable mood. The thought of the shock I shall give you and trouble and disgrace I shall have brought to you, almost turns me from my purpose, and I do not even feel as though I were going to leave you in so cowardly a way, but when I contemplate the future I think it will be the least cruel to rid you of such an incubus as myself without any further delay. I cannot even ask you to forgive me for this last and most cowardly act of my life.

Please write to my mother as soon as you can do so and tell her that my only regret in leaving this life is the pain that I shall give to those who love me, and say that my regret to write was not because I did not think of them, but because I did not feel capable to write to any one but you.

I cannot undertake to make any disposition of my earnings, what are left—or property as it is mostly disposed of now. I feel sure that the matter will be in better hands than my own. I only wish to say that what little benefit accrues from my death, I should like to have applied to yourself, my mother and sister Hattie, for I wish to be more just to them than I have been.

Now, dear, my usual indecision controls me and I don't know whether you will ever see this or not, but if I never see you again, farewell. Unworthily yours, WILL.

It was apparent that he had committed a premeditated suicide. He had taken off his coat and placed a blanket under him so that the blood would not soil the carpet any more than necessary.

Mrs. Clark stated that she could conceive of no reason why her husband should take his life. Although he has been out of work for a short time, he had sufficient means to live on. "Our relations," said she, "have always been the happiest, and no domestic troubles have occurred to cloud this happy household. It is true that he has been despondent at times, but I never believed that he would commit suicide. Just before leaving for church, he asked me whether I had not forgotten something. I then went back and kissed him good-by. Those were the last words spoken by him to me."

There is a woman bilking the cities and small towns of this valley in great shape. She is a sick one. She was here about a week ago and succeeded in enlisting the sympathies of the Ladies Aid society of the Presbyterian church for money and a ticket to Portland. She gave her name as Jackson, said her husband had left her and she wanted to raise money enough to get back to Chicago, where her friends lived. Instead of going to Portland, she dropped off at Garvais, went to St. Louis, there gave her name as McMahon, played off as a pious Catholic and raised about $15 to $20. Religion and tears are her strong points. She is prolific in both and suits the religion to the crowd. She is 35 to 40 years old and a wholesale fraud. Give her the bounce.—Salem Statesman.

The members of the Presbyterian Sunday school of this city have arranged for a picnic to be given at Marion Station on Friday, June 14. The Sunday schools of Salem, Jefferson, Lebanon and other places will join in the picnic, and the various Sunday schools of all denominations in this city have been invited to attend. Half fare rates have been secured on the railroad, and a large attendance is promised. A basket dinner will be held in the grove.

The following patents were granted to citizens of the Pacific States during the past week, and reported for the HERALD by C. A. Snow & Co., patent lawyers, Washington, D. O.: J. W. SURVIVORS OF THE ALASKAN.

Eleven of Them Land Safely at Siuslaw—Still Hope for the Others.

Eleven men, survivors of the ill-fated Alaskan, arrived safely at Siuslaw Saturday night. One poor fellow who was in the boat perished in the breakers in landing, after enduring the sufferings of two nights and three days on the open ocean. The names of the survivors are: Ed. Ward, chief cook; E. A. Carlsson, coal passer; M. Ketcher, coal passer; James McKinley, or McGarry, coal passer; Mike McLain, oiler; Edward Sharples, coal passer; Harry Johnson, seaman; Jack, or G. H. Boss, coal passer; Edward Wenzel, second cook; Ed. Burns, name doubtful; J. Murray, name doubtful.

A report reached this city yesterday morning that a boat containing ten more of the crew had landed near Alsea Bay, but it is thought that this is the same boat above referred to. Capt. Winant, of Yaquina, has been searching the coast south of Yaquina in hope of picking up the other boat, but up to last evening was unsuccessful. It is thought that perhaps they have landed at some point on the coast, and will yet be rescued.

A report from Empire City states that James McGarry, who left the steamer Alaskan on a life-raft with the chief engineer and two other men, arrived there Saturday evening. The other three men died. One of the survivors who landed at Siuslaw, on reaching Eugene said: "The landing was very difficult. We had to watch our chance and take a large wave which would reach the shore before breaking. At last getting a chance, we put out, landing among the rocks. As soon as we struck we abandoned the boat and jumped in the water, the wave washing us up high and dry on the beach."

"Strange to say, we escaped uninjured. We were entirely destitute, and suffering greatly from want of food, drink and exposure. The people of Florence supplied us with food and clothing, for which we are unable to sufficiently thank them. We are now in good enough condition to go on to Portland. The boat we took on leaving the Alaskan was life boat No. 3."

Word reached this morning of the suicide of Richard Garvais, better known as "Dick," at St. Paul, on Saturday evening. Garvais is an old Frenchman that has been in that locality or about six years. He lived by himself in a little shanty and has made that his home since his coming.

The first known of the crime was Saturday evening when Charles Pelland was riding along the road and discovered Garvais in a fence corner, with his head almost blown away. He was lying within about 100 yards of his little shanty and had the appearance of having been dead several hours.

An old Springfield basket was found beside his head and it was with this that he killed himself. Part of his head and brains were blown thirty feet by the shot.

No cause is assigned for the rash act, only that he had become melancholy and was disgusted with himself and the world at large, and decided to end his existence as above stated.
