Disarming an Unseen Foe.

"This was sometime a paradox," as Hamlet says. Since, however, the people of America and other lands have been enabled to pit Hostetter's Stomach Bitters against that unseen foe, malaria, it is no longer a paradox, but an easy possibility. Whatever malaria evolves its misty venom to poison the air, and decaying unwholesome vegetation impregnates the water, there, in the very stronghold of miasma, is the auxiliary potent to disarm the foe and assure efficient protection. Fever and ague, bilious remittent, dumb ague and ague cake, no matter how tenaciously they have fastened their clutch on the system, are first forced to relax their grasp and eventually to abandon it altogether. But it is preventive force that should chiefly recommend the Bitters to persons dwelling in malaria-cursed localities, for it is a certain buckler of defence against which the enemy is powerless. It cures, likewise, dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney and billious ailments.

You Cannot Afford.

A Young French Explorer Surprises Paris.

She is the daughter of one of the chiefs who took a fancy to the explorer and gave him his daughter for a wife.

Business Is Gradually Resuming, and There Is Work for All.

Builders estimate that within the next thirty days there will be 1000 mechanics on their pay rolls.

The relief committee report an increasing number of applicants at headquarters to day, and each applicant is given provisions enough to last a family a week. No provisions are furnished men who refuse to work, as there is plenty to do at fair wages, and no excuse for idleness.

A SEATTLE PHOENIX.

He Remained in a Chimney Throughout the Fire and Lived.

L. B. Andrews in Seattle Times.

The old adage, that "truth is stranger than fiction," was exemplified recently by an incident that seems almost miraculous.

On the northwest corner of Madison and Second streets stood, before the late fire, a large frame building, known as the Methodist Protestant Church. Below the church on Madison street stood a a two story frame building, known as the parsonage of the said church.

There was built in or near the center of this dwelling, with the foundation resting on the ground in the basement, a brick chimney—with an opening or box for ashes in the base and on each floor above a fireplace. This chimney is still standing, the only thing left of that dwelling. To-day a man by the name of William McNamara, who was at work in the ruins of said church, heard a number of times somewhere near him the crowing of a rooster.

Not being able to see any chickens in the vicinity, and his curiosity being excited from the sort of smothered effect of the crowing, McNamara commenced looking for the author of that sound, which, as it still continued, he was soon able to locate in that chimney. After a while McNamara went into the burned out basement of the house, the rear of which was on a level with the alley on which it stood, and clearing away the bricks and debris which had fallen around the base of the chimney, discovered the orifice in the bottom made for taking out ashes which had fallen into the chimney from the fireplace above. Upon clearing away with his hands a large amount of ashes and debris from this orifice, and while one of his hands was in the orifice, he discovered something alive to his right thumb, for he received on his wrist a pick from the chicken, which convinced him that he was in condition to hunt for grub as soon as he should regain his liberty.

That bite brought from McNamara's wrist the red in good fighting shape. Just after this the chicken made his exit from the ash hole, and, upon regaining his liberty, [illegible] with Mac after him in full chase. After a short run Mac got near enough to his game to seize hold of his tail feathers, when, to his astonishment, they all came out, and Mac declares the the rooster's tail feathers were [illegible] so that they slipped out with less than half an ordinary pull.

What other conclusions can be reached than that this chicken, on the day of the fire, sought refuge in the basement of that parsonage, and, crawling into that ash opening, was imprisoned by the debris, which caused the crowing and kept him there till to-day, when his appeals from his prison-house for recognition and deliverance were rewarded with the one therefrom.

I say, that rooster within half an hour of the time that he regained his liberty, and I must say that he was just about the busiest piece of chicken, in his efforts for a bug, etc., to put in his crop, that it has ever been my fortune to witness.

A number of men were witnesses to the fact of that chicken running out of the bottom of that chimney.

Was he a relation to that rooster that is expected to crow on the resurrection morn to wake good Saint Peter, that he may open the pearly gates and let in the elect?
