The Best Sugar Industry in Europe—Cases of Yellow Fever at Quebec The Devilish War.

The Herald's Special Dispatches.

New York, July 16.—According to the World's special of this morning a conference was held in the city yesterday which may result in diverting a large share of the Union Pacific traffic across Canada to the seaboard. The conference was for the purpose of considering the advisability of building a line southwest in Wisconsin from the connection with the "Soo" line to Sioux City and Council Bluffs, which will give the Union Pacific direct line to a connection with the Canadian Pacific. This will result in a shorter route to the seaboard by several hundred miles than as heretofore via Chicago.

QUEBEC, July 16.—There is supposed yellow fever on board the ship premier. The captain is dead and two sailors are down with the disease.

Warning.

The modes of death's approach are various, and statistics show conclusively that more persons die from diseases of the throat and lungs than any other. It is probable that everyone, without exception, receives vast numbers of Tubercle Germs into the system and where these germs fall upon suitable soil they start into life and develop at first slowly and is shown by a slight tickling sensation in the throat and if allowed to continue their ravages they extend to the lungs producing consumption and to the head causing catarrh. Now all this is dangerous and if allowed to proceed will in time cause death. At the onset you must act with promptness; allowing a cold to go without attention is dangerous and may lose you your life. As soon as you feel that something is wrong with your throat, lungs or nostrils, obtain a bottle of Boschee's German Syrup. It will give you immediate relief.

Do not suffer an instant longer. Sold by druggists at 50c and 81c per tin. Sold by Foshey & Mason, Albany, Oregon.

IN BATHING ATTIRE.

Fashionable Girls at the Seaside Resorts.

New York World. All up and down our coast this week the doors of the bath-houses are open to admit an army of full-fledged angels, who come forth arrayed in every color of the rainbow and clothed with every device which the ingenious female mind can produce to increase her general bewitchingness, and make the sirens and mermaids, in their antiquated fish-tail costumes, retire to the deepest depth of the ocean in jealous disgust. The summer young woman has come forth prepared to conquer, and one of her surest weapons with which to dazzle and confound the summer young man is the costume in which she modestly and half-shamefacedly appears upon the sands when she makes her first dash into the salt water.

It is astonishing, however, to see how soon she recovers from the shamefacedness. During the winter to have shown any part of her stockings save the embroidered silken instep, curved up from her satin slipper, would have made her blush herself half to death, and this sudden summer rise of her skirts up to her knees makes her look very pink and conscious the first time she comes out of a bath-house.

"What makes all these girls walk so queerly?" asked an innocent youth the other day as a crowd of them came down across the white strip of sand and plunged into the sea. "Oh," explained his companion, who was reposing absent in his scant bathing suit and striking attitudes to display his shape and muscle, "they are trying to outdo the eighth of an inch to the length of their skirts by keeping their knees bent; but you give them time—they will get over that and walk all right before the summer is done."

Indeed, by the second week in July they will forget all about their earlier emotions, and will stop to the beach to bow and chatter to their acquaintances, or take a stroll up and down before their best young men to make engagements with them for dances at the Casino that night, or to introduce to them his best friend a perfect stranger who arrived from Philadelphia on the night train. She makes no apology and feels no embarrassment about the brevity of her attire.

It is rigidly exacted of fashionable widows that they shall bathe in mourning. If the departed is a recent loss they must mourn from head to foot and have not a touch of any color, not even white, about them; if time has somewhat assuaged the anguish of widowhood the bathing dress may be embroidered in white or have a collar and revers of the same, and if a year and a half has elapsed since her husband became an angel, even the most rigid consider her justified in having her bathing dress made either of gray, white or violet serge.

This fashion was started by the pretty widow of O'Donnell of Baltimore, who was called upon to mourn a rich young husband, who died after a brief union. This occurred in the spring, and when summer came the doctors insisted that sea bathing was necessary as a cure for her nervous relaxation brought on by mental suffering, and she appeared, shrouded in crape, at a fashionable watering-place. Then the question arose concerning the bathing dress. No one ever wore black bathing dresses, and the afflicted relict utterly refused to appear anywhere, even in the sea, except in garments of the deepest sable. There was a visible sensation when she came down to the beach one morning all in black from top to toe, with her very white arms and shoulders bare, and a little blue silk handkerchief tied coquettishly over her golden hair. Before a week was over every man in the place was occupied in securing an introduction to that pathetic little black figure, and the cheerful women in their light-colored gowns were nowhere at all. Since that time widows all over the country have adopted the fashion and regulated it by fixed law.

DROWNED IN SKIM MILK.

The Curious Fate of a Little Boy.

Philadelphia Press. The people who live in the country round about Septimus Turner's farm-house, two miles from Bristol, cannot believe that Farmer Turner's grandchild, George Dwyer, was drowned in a wash boiler full of milk. It is a fact, though, that Farmer Turner's fifteen-months-old grandchild was found drowned and that he was drowned in a boiler full of Farmer Turner's milk.

The drowning has caused a sensation among the people of that vicinity because the Turner's are well known, and nearly every wagon that passed the farm carried some one who knew the bright little toddler who met his death on Monday morning. The cows on Turner's farm were watered about sunrise and then driven over to the barn, where the farm hands stabled and milked them. Later the milk was carried over to the springhouse, where Mrs. Turner and little George Dwyer were.

Little George was the pride of Turner's farm, being the kind old farmer's youngest grandchild. The youngster, only 15 months old, was stouter than most infants at that age and could romp among the dairy patches as well as Farmer Turner's daughter could. In fact he has been walking since he was 10 months old. Mrs. Turner took the child with her on her regular morning trip to the dairy on Monday, and while she attended to some churning and other work, little George toddled around the springhouse. A big wash boiler of skimmed milk was drawn out in a churn and placed on the floor, around which the child in boyish glee skipped and jumped.

After a while Mrs. Turner was called to the barn and went there, leaving the boy to play with the boiler filled with milk. When he was alone George quieted and every few seconds would reach over the side, dip his fingers in the milk and taste it. Then he wanted to see what it was that tasted so good, and to do so jumped up and down, by the can, looking over the rim ever time he got his head high enough. Then the youngster put one foot over the edge and dipped his head in to get a drink. This was a fatal move, for the child lost his balance and fell headlong into the white fluid, with his feet sticking out over the edge of the can.

One of Mr. Turner's little daughters came into the dairy and, seeing George's feet up, ran and tried to pull her little nephew out, but failed. Then she called her mother, who lifted the child out. He was dead.

Dr. Pettis of Bristol was hastily summoned and tried to restore respiration, but failed, the child having been dead some time.

PROGRESSIVE PIGGANS.

They Steal No More Horses, but Work for a Living.

Great Falls Tribune. Major Baldwin, the Indian agent at the Piegian agency, was asked Wednesday by a Tribune reporter the condition, prospects and general progress of the noble red men under his care. Major Baldwin might have been amazed at the extent of his meek request, but he spoke as follows to the scribe:

"The Piegian Indians are in good condition; they have bright prospects and are making steady progress. They have quit horse-stealing. Not a depredation claim for loss of property has been filed against them for an act committed within the past three years, although numerous claims are pending for robberies prior to that time. The Piegians have wholly abandoned the medicine lodge, or annual gathering, one of the worst institutions of Indian life and the cause of much crime."

"They have built," continued Major Baldwin, "sixty miles of fence about their homes and farms, none of which existed two years ago. They hauled all their own freight from Fort Benton last year, and were paid in cash for doing so."

"They are more honest, industrious and enterprising than they ever were."

"Are they well fed?" inquired the reporter, having in mind their sufferings some years ago.

"They are. We distribute meat (from twenty to twenty-six good beef steers) among them weekly. When I took charge of the agency only eight steers were killed weekly. As to animals, they are all better off. We received recently ten fine Newborn mares, so as to improve their stock. They have new plants of machinery, mowers and reapers, and are qualified to take care of them. The best man in this country bears witness to their improved condition."

The Piegian is also "going it alone." On that point Major Baldwin said:

"Many of them have taken up lands in severally, although none has been allotted them as yet. The wish for such allotment tends to break up their tribal relations."

Disarming an Unseen Foe.

"This was sometimes a paradox," as Hamlet says. Since, however, the people of America and other lands have been enabled to get Hostetter's Stomach Bitters against that unclean foe, malaria, it is no longer a paradox, but an easy possibility. Whatever malaria evolves its misty venom to poison the air, and decaying unwholesome vegetation impregnate the water there, in the very stronghold of miasma, the auxiliary potent to disarm the foe and assure efficient protection. Feyer and ague, bilious remittent, dumb ague and ague cake, no matter how tenaciously they have fastened their clutch on the system, are first forced to relax their grasp and eventually to abandon it altogether. But it is preventive force that should chiefly recommend the Bitters to persons dwelling in malarious localities, for it is a certain bulwark of defense against wild the enemy's powerless. Cures, like wise, dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney and bilious ailments.
