OVER THE WIRES.

An Important Decision By the Land Commissioner.

AN ATTEMPTED MURDER.

The Herald's Special Dispatches.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Land Commissioner Groff has rendered a decision in the case of Mrs. Barris, formerly a resident of Mitchell, Dakota, land district.

It appears from the testimony that in July, 1885, Mrs. Barris, then a resident of the state of Ohio, went to Dakota to visit, and while there took up eighty acres adjoining a tract recently entered by Michael Barr, she purchased a house and had it moved on her claim, broke an acre of land and made other improvements. At that time, she says in her testimony, she had no intention of marrying Mr. Barr. But later they were married, when they moved their houses upon the ground together, on the line, like one house. They took a married, and Barris put his bed, stove, table, etc., in his house, and she put her bed, stove, table, etc., in hers. There were no meetings between them when in separate parts of the house except by going outside, each having an outside door. She testified that she was acting on fact in filing the entry, not knowing much about law at the time, and having no understanding about the Barris family. That she complied with the same law fully.

Notwithstanding this, the army appeared last night with its drum and flags flying, and reinforced by twenty-five new members. When they reached Main street they were met by the marshal and five policemen, but were allowed to go unmolested, loudly cheered by the people on sidewalk.

A CHILD TRAMP.

How a Little Girl Crossed the Continent—A Strange Story.

New Brunswick (N. J.), Oct. 10.—The Overseer of Poor of this place has in his charge a young girl with a history that would do credit to a professional tramp, consisting as it does of a long series of hardships in her life on the road. The girl, who says her name is Mary Reper, is barely 12 years old. She was found crying on the street yesterday and she presented a very pitiable appearance. She was clad in a thin gingham dress and wore no hat, shoes or stockings. Her complexion, naturally dark, was bronzed by exposure to the heat of an Indian. The tears coursing down her cheeks plowed little furrows in the grime of her face.

A woman, touched by the child's grief, questioned her, and amid sobs, the girl told her she was from California and for two years had been tramping east, eating and sleeping as fortune directed. She was fed and warm clothing and a bath given her, which effected quite a transformation in her appearance, and she would be considered passably good looking were it not for her gaunt appearance. At the police station Mary said that her father, John Reper, had died five years ago in California. Her mother, who, who was a consumptive, did not long survive the shock and she too died leaving Mary to the care of her aunt. Within the year the aunt died, and also for the following two years Mary was cared for by neighbors, for whom she did such work as her youth would permit and which at times was far in excess of her strength.

She had just passed her tenth birthday when it occurred to her to run away and come East, with no definite object in view. One fine day she hopped on a freight train and began her long journey. She said that the brakemen, as a rule, were very kind to her, and gave her food and a place to sleep in the cars, but there were some who chased her from the cars, and many a weary mile she tramped until another train would happen along. During these tramps she begged food, sometimes sleeping at night in a haystack or a barn, and at other times in a good, warm bed, when some hospitable farmer would take her in. At many places she stopped for weeks at a time, helping a farmer's wife in housework and receiving instructions in cooking, so that now she is quite a housekeeper, and boasts of her skill in making biscuits. After several weeks of quiet farm life the old desire for travel would come upon her, and she would depart and resume her journey.

It was nearly two years after leaving her California friends that she entered the quiet Jersey town of North Branch. There she remained several days, subsisting on charity. On Saturday she boarded a coal train at Elizabeth, and from that place to New Brunswick she rode and walked, arriving here in a condition of destitution. Although thin, the child has a wonderful constitution, else the hardships and privations she has endured would have caused her death long ago.

THE REPRESENTATIVES FROM BUENOS AYRES AND VALPARAISO WHO KNOW THEIR OWN INTERESTS AND ARE ABLE TO TAKE CARE OF THEMSELVES WILL REPLY: "YOU MUST IN RETURN CONCEDE TO US THE ONLY THING WORTH CONCESSING, OUR FREEDOM. THE PRESENT AD VALOREM DUTY MUST BE ABATED." This raises sharply the whole question of the policy of protection.

We admit that even if no commercial reciprocity is established the congress may have important consequences extending beyond the present horizon. It has been the dream of not a few American statesmen that their country might possess a sort of hegemony over the whole continent. In a famous passage Daniel Webster described the influence exercised by the United States upon the birth of the young states of the South. They had copied her institutions; they had copied her experience, and, as he said in his large and fervid way, they "had looked in every emergency to the great northern light."

American statesmen have been prone to believe that this moral ascendancy might be continued, and none among them in recent times has more favored this idea than Mr. Blaine. We do not much wonder thereat. Sentiment and ambition are not the exclusive weaknesses of monarchies. It is a just cause of pride that in the Capitol of the United States this week will meet representatives of all the American republics, great and small. Common institutions with histories in many ways alike awaken sympathy. There is dramatic fitness in the fact that the sons of Bolivar and Miranda should visit the shrine of Washington.
