ARID LANDS.

The subject of irrigation is attracting more and more attention, from the practical men of the nation, as it becomes better understood. Major Powell, of the United States Geological Survey, says that in the great West there are 100,000,000 acres of land, now arid and wholly valueless, which can be made productive by irrigation. This was said in response to questions put to him by the arid lands committee of the senate; and it is understood that the committee will report the advisability of congressional appropriations for surveys in arid districts. The Chronicle says of course, the first step toward the reclamation of the arid lands; but it is interesting to take a step farther and to see what the result of the statement made by Major Powell, may be, when the United States has perfected and put into operation a comprehensible system of irrigation. As the arid lands are now they are absolutely of no value to anybody. The government could not give them away, to say nothing of selling them. It has been estimated that it will cost the United States about $100,000,000 to make these lands cultivable by providing them with a regular supply of water for irrigation. When this is done the lands will sell readily at an average of $10 per acre, so the account will stand in this way: Cost of reclamation $100,000,000; cash received from sale of reclaimed lands, 100,000,000 acres, at 10 per acre, $1 000,000,000; profit to the United States on the transaction, $900,000,000, or more than the actual amount of the national debt at this time. But this is not the best or strongest argument in favor of reclaiming the arid lands. If the United States should pay out $100,000,000 and not only make a profit on the land but not even get back a single cent of its outlay, still it would be a good speculation; for the country could well afford to buy cultivable land for the people at $1 per acre. To add 100,000,000 acres to the tillable land of the United States is to create homes for generations yet unborn. It creates a territory nearly as large as the Republic of France, which supports a population of 38,000,000 people; and all this the government can get for $1 an acre. Certainly no other nation in the world would hesitate a moment over the proposition, and it is not likely that congress will haggle over it when it clearly understands it.

The Russians have recently improved on the sleeping-coaches of the railway and the preambulating schoolmaster of the rural regions. They have provided a school-wagon, which is furnished with a room for the teacher, a class-room or study, and a library, all suitably supplied with the necessary material. This wagon will be on the line of the Transcaspian railway all the year round, remaining as long as may be deemed necessary at districts which are not provided with a school.

One hundred thousand volumes were last year added to seventy-five college libraries in the United States. The largest accession was that of 12,000 volumes to the Harvard Library. The libraries of Columbia, Cornell, Boston University, Yale and Princeton also received large additions.

It has been suggested that if Steve Brodie, the American high jumper, could be induced to go to Paris and jump from the top of the Eiffel tower, the public, who have been harrowed with his hair brained exploits, would be considerably rested.

POSTAL CHANGES.

Postmaster-General Wanamaker will recommend in his annual report that the free delivery system be extended to cities of 8000 inhabitants. This recommendation is warranted by the fact that the revenue of the free delivery offices for the year will be from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 in excess of the expenses.

A number of Mr. Wanamaker's predecessors have made various recommendations from time to time relative to improving the character of the postal service, but there has always been a school of economists who have set their faces against any change unless it could be seen from the very beginning that it would be a source of profit to the government or at least would pay its own way. They have insisted that the postoffice department ought to be self-sustaining, as though what was wanted was not an efficient postal service, but an agency by which the coffers of the nation might be filled. Happily in the present instance the argument cannot be used against the extension of the free-delivery system, so there is a reasonable prospect that the recommendation may be adopted.

The mayor of Chicago has considerable chivalry in his composition. He indicates that in the disposition of offices that he will remember the gentler sex, but that he shall consider only the claims of widows and women defendent upon their own exertions.

Ex-Gov. St John thinks the prohibition ticket will sweep the country in 1900. It will take a great deal of industry to get over so large a space with such a small broom.

Since August, 1887, the government has purchased bonds to the amount of $201,720,650, at a total cost of $234,497,744.
