of government they are much likelier to sicken of the disorders incident to a republican regime. He says that if, on the contrary, the republic maintains order and adds to the prosperity of the country it will justify its existence, and nothing ought to be done to disturb its tranquil continuance.

EDITORIAL NOTES. SARAH BERNHARDT is preparing to appear on the French stage in the role of Joan of Arc. The culminating scene of the play will be the funeral pyre of the maid upon the funeral pyre at Ronen, gotten up with the highest amount of scenic effect ever brought out on the stage before.

MISS CALDWELL, even if she is bartering her ducats for a worn out title, seems to have the whip row, and is independent enough to hold the reins in her own hands. She has brought Prince Murat to her terms and the marriage will take place without any stipulated amount of her coin to be placed at his disposal.

Physicians have advised Stanley not to brave the danger, in his weakened condition, of changing from the tropics to the severities of the north, but to remain in Africa until summer comes, and the East African company have offered him a place at the head of affairs at Mombassa. It will be a great disappointment to the people of England and America if Stanley remains there. They are envying terribly for a modern hero worship.

A Monterey, California, farmer tells the Chronicle that the suggestions which frequently find their way into print that the agriculturist should pay some attention to the business of poultry raising are not given by those who are posted as to the situation. He declares that all the profits go to the middlemen and the transportation companies. It is a long time, he adds, since farmers have received more than twelve cents a dozen for eggs. His claim may be right as far as California is concerned but it does not apply to that extent in Oregon. Poultry business carried on with judgment and care, is a paying business here.

THE CONTRAST between the treatment meted out to enemies by republics and those of despotic monarchies, can perhaps be surmised from cognizance of the results of the discovering of a plot to depose the Sultan of Morocco. The Sultan's brother was at the head of the conspiracy, and he and all the traitors were arrested. They, including some of the leading courtiers, were condemned to death and promptly executed. Contrast that with pomp and parade lately expended upon the funeral of the chief conspirator against our republic after enjoying the full benefits of the government he tried to destroy, for twenty-five years.

DOM PEDRO in his exile in Portugal, seems to be chiefly troubled to hold in check the plots and schemes of his ambitious son-in-law, Count d'Eu, who has been making every possible effort to incite a civil war in Brazil, with the hope of re-establishing the empire and securing his own succession to the throne. Dom Pedro it is said is not adverse to the rehabilitation of the empire, but he thinks that it can be accomplished in a much easier and better way than the Count and his imperial sympathizers propose to employ. He believes that if the Brazilians are let alone with their new form
