THE SUNDAY PAPER.

There has been a great deal of discussion upon the subject that forms the caption of this article. That discussion, too, has been often bitter in invective, and, taking the standard of a purely Sunday paper as it has been presented to the public, being the voicing of the sporting and immoral part of the community, there has been cause for opposition and outspoken denunciation. But in the Sunday editions of the great daily newspapers of the country the denunciatory opposition is uncalled for and as useless as spending the breath against the free air of the heavens.

The Sunday newspaper was evolved by the demand of the people, or it would never have been started, or if it had could not have lived. As it meets with such universal demand and success, it is obvious that there is no prospect of ever making headway against the Sunday paper, or stemming the tide of its rapid progress.

The New York Tribune in reviewing the first inception of its Sunday edition, says:

"The policy entered upon ten years ago has been amply vindicated by the results. There have been protests on the part of a few readers, but the Sunday Tribune has, in the majority of cases come to be considered indispensable. It is not necessary here and now to enter upon a defense of the general policy of Sunday papers. They are facts. They have come to stay. Now and then, to be sure, we hear of the ministers' meetings which denounce them and urge religious people not to buy or read them; but the protests are half-hearted and have no appreciable effect upon the community. Everybody but the most hopelessly ignorant knows by this time that the work of preparing the Sunday editions is practically all completed before midnight on Saturday, and that if any one of the daily issues is to be abjured because the work on it is done on Sunday it is the Monday paper that should suffer. No; the question with the newspaper editor of to-day is not whether he shall publish on seven days of the week, but how he can make his Sunday edition as good as possible."

That expresses the situation quite emphatically but truthfully, and the kickers against the Sunday paper are kicking themselves out much faster than they are or ever will the supposed evil that they are working against. Sunday papers are as great an institution as any of the great institutions of the country.

An eastern railway superintendent seems to be particularly anxious that the personal appearance of the employees of the road should tally with his ideas of good looks, and therefore he orders them to shave off their beards. Probably he would better conserve the interests of the road and the benefit of the public if he would divert his extra amount of energetic surveillance towards promoting prompt carefulness on the part of his men rather than meddling with their beards.

The Congressional Ways and Means committee have their hands full at present, listening to the multifarious interests of the country, for better protection in tariff matters. Of course each interest labors for its own benefit, and the difficulty is to judge between the different candidates that are affected.

General Crook has evolved considerable sympathy for the Apache Indians, who are confined in Florida. Probably if they were released they would demonstrate that sympathy was lost upon them. It is not good policy to swear in rattlesnakes and let them go on parole.

Congress is debating the question of negro emigration to Africa, with considerable noise on the part of the southern members, but probably with very little genuine belief in its ultimate success. The removal of the colored people means the loss of their laborers, which they cannot afford to sustain.

Senator Whiteman, of Duluth, Minnesota, has special reason to remember his mother-in-law. He sold her a lot of land, and finding it worthless, she sued him to recover the purchase price, and the jury decided in her favor. The divorce mill relieved him of his wife but the wife's mother is still after him.

The bursting of a waterspout in China, resulted in the destruction of much valuable property and disastrous loss of life. So dense is the population in that country that accidents of that nature are attended with an extraordinary loss of life, much more so than in any other country.

Senator Stanford, it is announced on the 17th, inst., dines and wines the senators whose constituencies lie west of the Mississippi river, at his home in Washington. The affair will be elaborately gotten up.

The California Pacific Rural Press says that Albany is known as the Queen City of the Willamette Valley.
