ARE THE SEASONS CHANGING.

More or less prognostications as to the possible change in the climate are always in order, but there seems to be a special reason for such talk in view of last winter and the present winter as far as it has run its course at this time.

Last winter was of remarkable lightness everywhere. Minnesota failed in material for an ice palace. This year the winter solstice comes mostly in name, for it is said that even in northern Russia, where the rule has been for three and four feet of snow, the ground is bare this winter.

Taking these facts as evidence of a steady modification of the conditions governing the temperature of the whole world, a subject of the greatest interest would certainly be opened up for the study of both the meteorologists and astronomers.
