PUNISHMENT OF CRIME OR PREVENTION.

It is seldom that we see the actual embodiment of really humane and practically reformative ideas, in the discussions of the punishment of crime. Latent vindictiveness almost always colors the views of the talkers or writers upon the subject. Dr. Lydston, however steps ahead of his contemporaries in this matter and takes the lead when he says that the children of the convict class, and of the very poor, should be under medical supervision...

skillful, and industrious convicts could be permitted to share in the profits of their, thus accomplishing a twofold object, viz., teaching them the dignity of labor, and giving them a capital of money and marketable skill wherewith to gain an honest livelihood after a discharge from jail. In our present system, how do we discharge the convict? Is he better, wiser, more capable of gaining an honest living than when immured in jail? No, for he has learned nothing but hatred of the law, new and improved methods of crime, new ways to escape detection; he is more brutal, less susceptible to moral persuasion, and more cunning than ever. He has no capital of money or brains; every avenue of escape from criminality is closed to him; he is a jail-bird, with all his emoluments and privileges—the principal emolument being an opportunity to indulge his revengeful feelings toward those who have punished him, and the principal privilege that of breaking back into jail. He has but one trade—that of the law-breaker—and he follows it with the firm resolve not "to do better," but that "they shall not catch me again."

CONGRESSMAN MORROW has introduced in the house of representatives a bill which looks to the real and genuine exclusion of Chinese from the United States. It prohibits Chinese from passing through the country, excepting only officials in the diplomatic or consular service, and it makes no distinction between Chinese who have been here before and those who have not. This bill, it is understood, contains provisions for the registering and certification of Chinese who are not residents of the United States, in order that the exclusion clause of the bill may be made effective, for experience has shown that it is impossible to tell residents from immigrants unless there be some means of identification such as the registration and certification of the Chinese would furnish.

The question of the holding of the World's Fair and its location is one of the vexatious matters that agitates the present session of our National Congress. As far as the location and New York city is concerned it is a significant fact that they are beginning to talk, in that city, that congress should first decide whether it will hold the fair and then settle the location. All the rest of the country think that the question of holding the fair has already been decided. Perhaps New York wants to knock it out altogether for fear that it cannot get it, something on the dog in the manger style. Chicago seems to be perfectly tranquil in its view of the subject.
