stairs in the rooms formerly occupied by the Masonic lodge, where larger and more commodious quarters have been fitted up. Patrons of the paper will please observe the change.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

Perhaps there is no subject before our people that outweighs in interest that of the coinage of silver.
The arguments on both sides are carried on with spirit, and whether free coinage or paper issue on silver bullion is to be the rule of action is the real question, for the demonization of silver will not be longer tolerated.
Senator Stewart, of Nevada, is one of the able exponents of the unlimited coinage of silver and he has written to the New York Tribune his views upon the subject. As he is the recognized leader of the unlimited silver-coinage contingent, his arguments may be taken as the best that can be advanced on this topic. They are interesting just at this time when the whole subject of our silver coinage is a living issue which congress proposes to take hold of very soon.
Senator Stewart says 1,200,000,000 people in the world use silver for money; not over 200,000,000 use gold. The total money of the world is given at $11,488,500,000, of which $3,831,500,000 is silver, $3,711,000,000 gold and $3,946,000, 000 paper. He says if gold is the only money metal, silver and paper should be abolished. But it would be impossible to get the $8,000,000,000 in gold to take their places, or if the silver be turned into paper there would be $8,000, 000,000 of credit money based on less than $4,000,000,000 of gold—which would be inflation with a vengeance. He holds that in the last fifteen years the stock of gold coin has not increased, the present production being entirely absorbed in the arts and in loss by wear and otherwise, so that silver must be relied upon in the future for increase in coinage. But to demonize silver would reduce one-half the gold supply, as that proportion of the gold product is now taken out of silver-bearing ores which would not be profitable to work for either metal alone. He calls limited silver coinage practical demonization. He holds more paper money is needed, as is shown by the issue of $4,000,000,000 of paper money and that there could be no possible danger until that amount of coin was added to the circulation. The addition must come from silver as there is no gain in gold, as above stated, and it would be impossible to ever coin $4,000,000,000 in silver in addition to the ordinary increased demands of trade. He says Europe needs all the silver it can get outside of this country and takes $12,000,000 from us besides, and that in no event would this country get any but the product of our own mines.
The present paper money of the United States in excess of metallic reserves is $426,000,000. To check the rapid decline of prices everywhere he estimates that $300,000,000 in addition is necessary. To place this money on a metallic basis, $726,000,000 of gold or silver would be required. He does not believe that the Nation could ever accumulate that much in addition to annually increasing needs, and until that point is reached he argues there will be no danger of inflation.
He concludes, therefore, that free coinage is necessary to restore values which have declined since its demonization in 1873, and that as far from there ever being a glut of silver, the only trouble would be that there would not be silver enough available for the purpose.
The very self sacrificing spirit that has been evinced by the lady who, in all her youth and good looks, has voluntarily gone to the Sandwich Islands, to become a nurse to the colony of lepers on the island, comes under a different view when all the facts are taken into consideration. Practically she is committing suicide and uselessly, too. A correspondent to the St. James, England Gazette says:

" In reference to the mission of Sister Rose Gertrude to the lepers of Molokai, it is difficult to suppress a feeling that she thus serves the cause of humanity on the terms of deliberate suicide. In the case of the priest so acting (as in the instance of Father Damien), the sacraments and offices of the church must be administered by him alone, and upon him they are obligatory—even at the penalty of life. But in the case of the nurse, and in all that a Sister may do, the parallel fails; as does, obviously, the description in the press of Sister Rose Gertrude as "Father Damien's successor." Sister Rose Gertrude can accomplish for the lepers no more than they can accomplish for themselves—if aided by the support of funds from Christian sympathizers in other parts of the world. The leper colony at Molokai is not stricken in prostrate helplessness like men maimed and wounded to the death on a battlefield. The sufferers pursue—the despite the fatal sign upon them—the ordinary occupations, and even amusements, of life. So that for a time, more or less lengthened, they are fully able to minister to each other's wants—nursing included.
One asks, therefore, in the names both of religion and common sense, why a healthy young lady should be encouraged to court death on so false and emotional an issue.
