REMOVAL.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

ONE of our American bicycle men, Thomas Stevens, who has been making the tour of the world with his wheel, has gained from the English Royal Geographical society a recognition of his African attempt to reach Stanley. Our American wheelmen lead the world in their line.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN while on a spree, recently, on Broadway New York, caught sight of a sister of charity, and made quite a public demonstration in getting her to accept a fity dollar donation. Probably he roundly cursed himself when sober enough to take in the situation, over the loss of the money.

THE strange story told in regard to the removal in secret, by friends, of the body of President Garfield, from the vault in which it lay to a private vault, for protection from the grave robbing ghouls, reads like romance, and is not a recommendation for the honest patriotism of the American people. But then cupidity will create even grave robbers.

THE South Carolina man who shot his wife and her uncle, and when arrested nonchalently remarked to the officers that it was only a family affair, seemed to have very peculiar ideas upon the duties and responsibilities of individuals in their relation to the family. Probably his family affair will not linger within the sacred precincts of the family. The state will evidently take a hand in it.

IDAHO, in her application for state-hood, seems to be fortified with all the facts and figures to back up her claim for the position. While the territory grew slowly in the early days of its organization, it has now laid the foundations for a rich and prosperous commonwealth. Her population last year was estimated to be over 117,000, and the senate committee expresses the belief that within one year after her admission as a state these figures will be increased to 150,000.

THERE seems to be a slight difference between the administration of justice in this country and in Europe, and in some instances the example from over the water might at least be considered, and perhaps a moral extracted that could profitably be applied on this side. For instance here is M. Corvillain, whose cartridge factory exploded in Antwerp a few months ago and caused enormous damage. He was convicted of criminal carelessness and sentenced for four years and six months and to pay a fine of 2,500 francs. It was commonly supposed that he had got off pretty easy, but M. Corvillain had the temerity to enter an appeal. The Appellate Court has not only affirmed the original sentence, but added eighteen months to the term of imprisonment. It is evident that M. Corvillain didn't know a good thing when he saw it, and the general verdict will probably be, "Served him right."

IN the postal expansion and improvement business, it is beginning to be strongly recommended that the free delivery system be extended, and especially that more efficiency be established. At frequent intervals there is a demand made for reduced rates of postage, but if the people of the United States could be polled on the question it would be found that a very large majority want increased efficiency in the postal service much more than they want one-cent letter postage. There is no general demand for reduction in rates, but there is a very strong desire to have the postal service employed to better advantage. It is claimed from this standpoint that congress would do well to extend the free delivery system at least to the 291 cities and towns of 5000 inhabitants. The additional expense, less than $700,000 should not stand in the way of increasing the efficiency of the postal service, and conferring additional benefits and advantages upon the people of the United States, who support that service. It has been demonstrated that free postal delivery is a profitable undertaking, inasmuch as it increases the revenues of the Postoffice Department in a remarkable degree. When letter-writers can know that their letters will be delivered promptly and with accuracy there is much more temptation to write than where the delivery system is not in vogue.

WE measure a variety of articles by the yard, but what that yard practically is would be a hard matter to elucidate, it may be said in answer that a yard is simply an arbitrary standard which tradition says is based upon the length of the arm of Henry VIII. At present the yard is the distance between two marks upon a certain bar, kept in the Tower of London, and if it should be destroyed the exact standard could never be replaced. To avoid this uncertainty, and obtain a fixed and unvarying standard, the French, in the last century, made an accurate measurement of a quadrant of the earth's circumference, and, taking the ten-millionth part of this distance, gave it the name of metre, and adopted it as the standard of length. The length, which is equal to about 39 37 inches, is now in universal use on the continent of Europe, and is authorized as a legal standard in nearly all civilizod countries. Considerable discussion has arisen as to whether the original measurement was perfectly accurate, and it seems probable that there was a small error, so that if the standard metre now kept in Paris should be destroyed, a remeasurement of the quadrant of the earth would not give us exactly the same metre. However, the error in any case is a very minute one, and the chances are very small that the original standard will ever be destroyed, to say nothing of the fact that the numerous copies distributed among the various nations of the world do not appreciably differ from it.
