Time for Action.

West Albany, T. J. Stites.

Under the heading "Railroad Prospects," the Ochoco Review "C. M. Cartwright, who was in town yesterday, says that while in Portland recently he was conversing with a prominent rail-road man, and was told that in all probability a railroad would be built from some point on the Columbia river into Crook county long before the O. P. road was completed. From this it would seem railroad men are looking this way for investments, and that there are grounds for supposing that this section may at some early date have railroad connection with the Columbia." The people of Albany and Crook county, who have long wanted railroad connection, will hope that the Oregou Pacific will push their road through Eastern Oregon at once and secure this valuable
