EDITORIAL NOTES

It would be a good idea for every head of a family to prepare and have in readiness against the arrival of the census marshal a complete answer to all the interrogatories. The work of the enumerators would be greatly facilitated by such a course, and the householders would be saved the appearance of an inquisition.

If Senator Beck's will does not carry the approval of the courts, it certainly ought to have their respect—on account of its age if nothing else. It is said to have lain in wait for the Senator's death for thirty-five years. One of its provisions is said to be that his sons-in-law shall not have any control of their wives property. Apparently he was a practical women's rights man.

In view of the universality of gas as an illuminative in cities and the many fatal accidents arising therefrom, the issuance of a small book, embodying the suggestions for the treatment of those overcome with gas, as they were made in a recent meeting held in Toronto, would not be amiss. But if those suggestive treatments could be made to guard against the gas poured out by the biped usually anathematized the bore, they would be more thoroughly appreciated.

Is the McKinley bill becomes the tariff law, which in all probability it will, the result will demonstrate whether the establishment of home manufactures really cheaper articles to consumers. Take for instance the tin-ware will be greatly reduced, just as the prices of glass, iron, cotton and other manufactured goods have been reduced, the creation of great competing industries in the United States. The thing has never failed yet, and will not in the case of tin, and the free traders therefore dread the experiment.

A Washington special says the squadron of evolution, which had come to be known as the white squadron, has been ordered to Brazil, and from there they will go through the straits of Magellan and up the west coast of South America to show the people of the United States has a navy. From Panama it will proceed to San Francisco, where it will be joined by the new cruiser Charleston, and the four big ships will proceed homeward by the way of the Cape of Good Hope. Next year a similar squadron consisting of the Baltimore, Newark, Philadelphia and the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius will be sent on a similar voyage for a similar purpose, to show the world the United States can build ships of which any nation might be proud; and the year following it is expected that another fleet will be ready for a similar voyage, composed of three or four of the finest ships afloat.

The action of the Presbyterian General Assembly, that recently closed its session at Saratoga New York, although continuing for the present the old creed but making provision for a revision committee, seems to have been imbued with wisdom and prudence and a very commendable spirit of liberal toleration on all sides. Two distinct and inimical factions existed—the revisionists and the anti-revisionists—yet they worked in harmony and strengthened the general cause when it was thought that the differences were a source of remedial weakness. The Tribune says that several things have settled by the action of the General Assembly in regard to the momentous questions of Creed revision that came before it. First of all, the legitimacy and propriety of revising the doctrinal Standards of the Church are admitted. This means more than a possible moderate revision of the Westminster Confession within the next two years, which is now indicated. It means that the Church is committed to the policy of keeping its doctrinal Standards in harmony with its contemporaneous belief. And it can only do so by revising or modifying those Standards whenever they cease to express its current belief of thought on fundamental matters. In the second place, the whole question of revising the Westminster Confession is made of secondary importance by the appointment of the committee to formulate a new Creed in conjunction with the Reformed Churches of the world holding to the Presbyterian system. That such a common Creed, brief and simple in its statements, will ultimately be adopted by these great churches is almost certain. And when it is adopted, nearly all the present popular interest in the Westminster Confession will die out. For it will be regarded no longer as sharply defined statement of belief, the acceptance of which involves eternal salvation, but as a venerable record of the Church's theological position in an age of fierce religious controversy.

The result of the election, as far as Linn county is concerned, is to leave the republicans in the soup—200 deep. All right, but some day—you know it is a long lane that has no turn—and the republicans will live and enjoy just as good county regime as the democratic officials choose to give us.
