tend to do away with the use of artificial weapons. As well as a military nation like France or Germany to throw away arms of precision and take up the old flint-lock musket, or even more, to put its soldiers into chain-armor and equip them with the sword, lance and dagger of the Middle Ages. No such reversion is possible, either with individuals or nations, and so long as a girl of 6 years of age with her finger on the trigger of a revolver is more a match for John L. Sullivan or Peter Jackson, so long will the common sense of the present generation revolt against fostering and cultivating an art which was crude and cruel at its best, and which, under changed conditions, is only a survival of brutality, pandering to the lowest and most degraded passions of the human race, and having no single ennobling or elevating sentiment connected with it.

The vice-president, of the United States and the lieutenant governor of several of the states, are officers that carry considerable honor with them but very little of anything else. Just at present a Mr. Jones, who happened to be elected lieutenant governor of the state of New York is adding a little absolute ruling to the honor, as Governor Hill is absent from the state ostensibly on a pleasure trip though probably trying to work up a presidential boom, and Lieutenant Governor Jones, according to the state constitution, becomes play governor during Hill's absence. For a brief space Jones is governor and it will be lucky for him if he gets through with the period of his responsibility without committing some egregious blunder.
