

A Story of Jesse Applegate.

Many old Oregonians remember Jesse Applegate, the sage of Yamhill. In the early days just for amusement, he would provide meals and lodgings for such travelers as he had to travel this way. It was an amusing custom with a certain class of stock-dealers who frequently went over the road to offer a $500 in payment for a night's entertainment, and if the change could not be given they would settle in full the next day they spent. One day a fellow whom Jesse had spotted offered a sling in the usual way, saying he was sorry, but really that was the smallest coin he had about him.

"I'm sorry too," replied the host, "for I haven't a bit of change in the house."

"Oh, never mind," replied the guest, "I'll hand it to you as I come back."

"But maybe I'll never see you again," said Jesse, "and you'll be long in coming back, and I'll be long here in about a week," said the other.

"Oh, well, in this case I'll just keep the slug as long as you can, and I'll have the change, or you'll be long in coming back, and I'll be long here in about a week," said the other.
