EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mr. Kruse, the special census agent, sent out to look after the delinquencies in this state, and now bringing his all observing optics to bear upon them in Minnesota, says that Oregon, or rather Portland, has no just cause to growl, and therefore our state will probably not have a chance to strive for a large enough count to bring in another congressman. In other words therewill be no recount from present appearances.

The production of steel rails in this country during the first six months of this year is given by a reliable authority as approximating very closely to 800,000 tons. This is said by the same authority to be 225,000 tons or more in excess of the production for the same period last year. This indicates a very healthful condition of the steel rail trade for the year so far, and the indications are that this activity will be continued.

The decision of the house committee on elections, to the effect that Beckenridge was not elected from the second district of Arkansas, will probably unseat Mr Beckenridge. The country at large will uphold that decision, and it will really be better for the gentleman himself. He can go before his district and if he is returned by a fair and square election he will stand vindicated and his influence augmented. But as long as he remained in congress under the stigma that followed from the murder of Clayton, his influence and standing were not good, and his place might as well be vacant.

The direct outcome of the buying up of the American industries by English capitalists, will be the advance of prices upon commodities manufactured. In the matter of beer—which was the first investment made, and which was hedged about by agreements with former proprietors not to engage in the business for five years, until the Englishmen thought they had obtained a full monopoly—it is immaterial to the general public whether the prices advance or not, but in other industries said to have been gobbled up, as for instance the tableware glass factories, it does make a material difference, and it is to be hoped that a competition will spring up that will make a monopoly of the business an impossibility.

Hypotism, which has been regarded as a fad by most people, will soon take its place among the knowledge helps to medicine and surgery. The French specialists have claimed for some time that it is invaluable to them in performing difficult operations, being attended with less risk than chloroform or ether, but it is only recently that carefully conducted experiments have been made in England, at Leeds, to determine the value of hypnotism in surgery. It was found that long and painful operations could be performed with ease while the patient was in the hypnotic sleep, and the curious thing is that on awaking they were unawares that anything had been done. The verdict of many medical men who witnessed the experimnets is that hypnotism will soon be given a place in the medical school curriculum.

The peculiarities of human nature crop out in various and unexpected manners. That human beings should delight in death and destruction is one of those anomalies, yet such seems to be the case. Even the nihilistic schemers themselves have no lack of active and earnest recruits. It is said that the craze among the Russians of the better class to engage in nihilist plots seems to be increasing. The latest report of a conspiracy in St Petersburg says that a professor of the university, as well as several students and military officers, are concerned in it. Despite every effort made by the government, a large amount of liberal literature is in circulation in Russia. The men who read it naturally become conspirators. for they find that many of the simplest elements of freedom enjoyed by people of other nations are denied to them. The only wonder is that amid all this nihilistic ferment no plot reaches the successful stage. It must be that spies are numerous, or that the police have improved in vigilance and keeness.

There has always been a feeling among the people of this country that the remains of her great General, U. S. Grant, should rest in the cemetery at Arlington, Heights at Washington, the capital of the country, and that the interment at New York was a mistake. This feeling has been intensified by the dilatoriness of the great city in the matter of erecting some suitable monument. The feeling will be further augmented by learning that New York has not only failed to keep her promises ma e at the time the burial site was selected, although she drummed all over the whole country for penny contributions to the Grant monument fund, but she has allowed actual desecration of the burial place to be made. Instead of the extensive flower garden that was promised to be kept in perpetual bloom on the adjacent plat of ground, an overgrown ungainly barn has been erected to accommodate the horses of a hotel near by. Congress should immediately make an appropriation for deferring the expense of removal procure the consent of the family, and suitably mark the final resting place of the great soldier in the national cemetery.
