JAPAN'S NEW DEPARTURE.

Last month the legal voters of the empire of Japan went to the polls and voted (on the Australian plan) for members of their first house of representatives, and also for elective members of the house of nobles. Under the new constitution the Mikado reserves the right of filling a certain number of seats in the latter body by appointment. A Tokio correspondent of the New York Mail and Express reports that foreign residents who expected to see a circus were disappointed. He writes:

There were at the polls none of those picturesquely comical scenes that had been looked for. Everything was practical and businesslike. The qualified electors came to the polls, deposited their ballots and went away. There was about the same sort of electioneering that one sees in the United States, minus the purchasing of votes, which is reputed to prevail in some districts. The polling places were open from 7 in the morning until 6 at night. Then the ballot boxes were locked up and taken away, to be opened and the votes counted at leisure the next day.

There will be four parties represented, it is said, on the benches of the first Japanese parliament. Three of them are described as "liberal," which in Japan means more or less eager to acclimatize there the ideas and methods of the Western countries. They constitute what the French would call the left center, left and extreme left, shading off from a mild quality of liberalism to radicalism. The right or conservative party, is composed of men who think the Europeanizing process has gone too fast and too far, and who want to keep Japan as Japanese as is now possible. But it is not a stolidly and stupidly reactionary party. "The leaders," writes a contributor to the New Review, "are not bigoted in their dislike for everything foreign. In fact most of them have been educated in the modern school." It is a regretable circumstance that the date fixed for the beginning of this interesting experiment in self-government should have found famine in more than one province of the empire, and a considerable portion of the people too engrossed in solving the problem of daily food to give any time or thought to the urgent problems of politics.

THE story that capitalists are ready to subscribe $2,000,000 for founding seven newspapers in as many leading cities to advocate the cause of Grover Cleveland for the presidency is a trifle fishy. It is very doubtful whether any such sum could be raised for this purpose, or whether avowed Cleveland organs would have any influence. The newspaper organ, as a rule, is of precious little either to the man whose cause it espouses or to the public, which wants its news as little colored as possible.

TO THROW a victim over the rocks at the famous Whirlpool in Niagara river would seem to be a pretty sure means of concealing a murder, yet the body of a woman who was supposed to have been put out of the way in this barbarous fashion has been recovered and will be used as evidence against her husband. The incident serves to prove the old theory that "murder will out," but in this case the crime would probably have escaped discovery for a long time if the murderer had not aroused the suspicions of two women.

ENGINEERING skill has been advanced so far that no project is now sufficiently stupendous to appall the imagination. Plans have accordingly been drawn to bridge Behring Straits and construct an all-rail route to Europe via Asia. The chief difficulty—one that for the present, at least, is insurmountable—is, such a road would not pay, and therefore could not command the necessary capital. As to the construction of two bridges, each twenty miles long, across an arm of the sea, that could probably be done if there was money in it. But in spite of the assurance that the climate is mild, owing to the Pacific Gulf Stream, and that there is no danger from ice, it would require some education of the traveling public to induce them to risk their lives on such a bridge.

THE settlement of Oklahoma, by the great rush that took possession of the land when the territory was opened for settlement, has met with predicted disaster, as this year the grain crop has been almost a failure, and the inhabitants who spent their all to get a slice of the coveted land are left helpless. Better locations could have been found in other localities without so much elbowing and certainty with better results

IF little work be done in congress these days it is safe to say that the consumption of cooling beverages will go on. Washington in August is not a pleasant place of residence, and this year has seen a greater number of hot days than for ten years, so that congress would have done better to indulge in more work in the spring and thus save sweltering in mid-summer.
