This afternoon Ben Lester, the 13-year-old son of Thos. Kester, while playing around a fire cistern, now being dug on Commercial street, lost his balance and fell in the distance being 12 feet. His wrist was broken, his head and body bruised and he was generally badly shaken up.

A Physician's Wife Elopes With a Drummer—The Couple Arrested.

Electric Canal Hoaxed.
From the Pittsburg Dispatch.
The application of electricity to canal boats is suggested by W. L. Adams. He proposes to use an electric trolley to tow the boats. If Mr. Adams' plans are feasible, the problem of getting speed on canals is solved. Labor as well as time will be saved, and the electric current which hauls his boat along at a round rate of speed will cook the captain's meals, warm his feet and light his course over the bounding main. Water power for running the electric motors could be obtained in many places, and Mr. Adams estimates that the cost of hauling by electricity would be very moderate. Now that the people are beginning to realize the value of canals, improvements in the motive power of canal boats are of the greatest importance.
