THE OPPOSING ELEMENTS.

With peace and prosperity everywhere in our domains we can look with complaisance upon the agitation in political circles upon the European continent. The intrigues that are going on are many and various, and involve the entire nationalities of the continent, though the central figures just now are the Czar of Russia and the Emperor of Germany. The Baltimore American thinks that the Emperor Williams' visit to Russia differs decidedly from recent royal junketings. The young German Emperor has an object in view, and proposes personally to accomplish it if that can be done. He will not be a figurehead in the consultations to be held at Varna, but an active participator, and it i- doubtful if Von Caprivi, his adviser, will be able to do more than temper the Emperor's rashness should he become excited by the stolid opposition of the Czar. William has opinions of his own, and very str..ng ones at that, and refuses absolutely to surrender either his conscience or his authority to his chancellor. He seeks the peace of Europe, but he seeks it after his own fashion and in accordance with Germany's present alliances, which does not please or satisfy the Czar. That there will be stormy scenes is highly probable. Two preliminary incidents have occurred which appear to be harbingers of the result of the interview. The Czarina so coldly received the suggestion that the German Empress should accompany her husband to Varna that the German minister at St. Petersburg advised her to remain at home. The Czar wants southeastern Europe, but Austria's very existence depends either on controlling it or having made independent of Russian influences. But the importance of its control is even greater than this. Statesmen are in the habit of looking ahead of the present moment. With Russia securely lodged in the Balkan peninsula, the Driebund would be entirely surrounded on every side, except where the sea interposes, by hostile armies. The immense Russian force in the northeast and southeast would be supplemented by the magnificent French military establishment in the west, and it would become very doubtful if the allies could successfully resist such a combination. To speak of the Russian army as unprepared is only comparative. None of the European armies except the French have kept abreast of the rapidly-increasing inventions, and the Czar is nearly as far to the front as his neighbors. The time will come when his troops are thoroughly prepared, and it is against this contingency that Emperor William must guard. He has undertaken a graver responsibility than any yet assumed by him, and the world will wish him success, but ft is probable that if he accomplishes any good it will only be to avert the inevitable European war for a short time.

THE works of the class of men who are making so much fuss and noise over the alleged suppression of vice do not carry the weight of consideration that they would if there was more confidence in its sincerity. For instance, it is s id that Anthony Comstock has a rival in New York in the person of a former clerk named Britton. This fellow has started a new society to suppress vice. When the post-office department suppressed Tolstoi's latest story Britton had a brilliant idea. He seized all the stock of a half-dozen flash novels in possession of the American News Company and had them carted to the Tombs. Meanwhile the gambling dens, policy shops, disorderly houses and all-night saloons are in full blast, while the weekly periodicals that make a specialty of vice and crime, with indecent pictures, are exhibited in the shop windows and sold at the street corners. It is evident that there is as great and powerful "pull" in this work of protecting virtue as there is in politics.

THE disgraceful scene on the floor of the house Wednesday in which one congressman punched another in approved pugilistic fashion and the speaker yelled "time," is accredited to the combined effects of the hot weather and the prolonged and tedious session. It shows at least that there are a few men in congress who have no business there and who are unfit to be the country's lawmakers. The present session of congress has been prolonged into the dog days and has been conducted more in the interests of the political ambition of party leaders instead of the good of the country. Congress should have finished its business and adjourned before this.

I got some of Chamberlain's colic, cholera and diarrhoea remedy and it cured both of them. I think it cannot be excelled and cheerfully recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Foshay & Mason.
