Now Ready to Proceed With the Main Building. H. Elliott, lots; L. V. Cook and A. B. Sealover, lot; J. H. Malin one lot, C. G. Burkhardt, two lots. The ladies will call upon the subscribers to the fund for money with which to prosecute the work, and will also solicit further subscriptions.

GAS AND OIL.

Lebanon People Are Enthusiastic Over the Discovery.

The Lebanon Express says: About three months ago Bon Fort, who has had experience in oil fields elsewhere, concluded from indications that near Wheeler's saw mill and also on "Brick" Hardin's property, one mile north-east of town there must be gas. So, armed with the necessary equipments—a stick and a match—he applied the test and made the discovery that gas is there. As soon as the stick was withdrawn and the match applied, a blaze leaped forth. He first told his friend E. C. Searls, and they took J. R. Kirkpatrick into their confidence. A joint stock company was at once formed, including about a dozen members. The matter was kept secret in order to obtain the property from its owner, Wm. M. Hoag, of the Oregon Pacific railroad company. That being impossible, it is now for the first time heralded to the world. Besides the gas, and but a little below where it was discovered, oil is oozing into the channel. Similar discoveries have also been made on Filkins' property above town and in Kirkpatrick's addition.

SALEM WITHOUT A TITLE.

A Quarter Section of Land in That City Which No Man Owns.

It is not generally known, but according to the tale of a gentleman, formerly an attorney of Salem, Oregon, a large portion of that city is unquestionably in jeopardy so far as perfect title is concerned. Some time since an Eastern capitalist concluded a bargain with a citizen of that place for the purchase of several acres of vacant land near the Willamette University. The stranger employed a well-known Salem lawyer to search the title. The attorney did his work and reported the title defective. In 1822, or thereabout, the old Methodist mission took up 160 acres of ground, on which stands the state house, Oregon courthouse, the Willamette university and scores of the finest residences in the capital city. The East saloon school building also stands on the land in question. The necessary filings were made, but for some reason the title failed to apply for and obtain the final papers of the deed from the government, but a few years ago, gradually, pieces of the land fell into about ninety acres and it is covered with buildings and the whole, with possible improvements, is worth over $200,000. When these facts were ascertained, those who owned land within the limits of the mission claim were badly scared, and at once employed a while lawyer to obtain a quitclaim deed from the government, for which they agreed to pay him a handsome fee. Only a few days since was the application made, and up to that time the whole tract might have been pre-empted by some daring speculator and for the next twenty years the case would have filled the courts. This story is no canard. It is an absolute fact that even the proud, pushing state of Oregon does not own the ground upon which her capitol building stands.—Evening Telegram.

Dallas Hop Yards.

Along the banks of the LaCreele and within the corporate limits of the town of Dallas are four hop yards that will yield a good crop. The growers are J. F. Groves, Dr. Kirkpatrick, H. B. Plummer and J. C. Morrison. They employ a divided according to size of hop yard, 240 pickers, men, women and children. Each yard has its own dry house and there is no loading-out on the drying business, as soon as the boxes are full they must be dried, or by standing a few hours they heat and spoil. 120 boxes make a kiln and it takes from 20 to 24 hours to dry. The yield of these yards will not be less than 45,000 pounds. Where is there another town in the state can beat Dallas for a hop town.—Polk Co. Observer.

A Sharp Witness.

During the murder trial in progress in the circuit court, R. W. Kenney, who made a map of the premises, was closely questioned by Attorney Butcher. He was asked several times regarding the whereabouts of John Helmeck, who was in a wool sack, trapping down wood when the trouble began; at last the witness, with great seriousness, replied: "I can't remember, exactly, whether Helmeck was in the southeast or northwest corner of the sack." Notwithstanding the solemnity of the occasion, a broad grin spread from face to face around the court-room at the neat rejoinder.—Pendleton East Oregonian.

THE STATE FAIR.

Preparations Completed for Its Successful Opening.

The State fair, which opens at the fair grounds this evening, is one of great activity, every room being busy in its preparations for the big fair—the thirtieth annual—which will be held during the six days of next week, commencing Monday. Each train brings new stock and implements, machinery, fruit, and other goods, and the people are arriving with flying swings, baby stands, cane racks, hobby horses, side shows, refreshment stands and other penny catchers by far too numerous to enumerate. Between all these there is a rush, too, as would indicate that the coming fair is to be a little the finest one ever held in the state.

An Egyptian Current Wheel.

The Salem Statesman says: At a party for some time to raise water from Still creek to the State fair grounds, by means of a hydraulic ram the same was abandoned and the ram removed. The reason for the failure of the ram to perform the service is found in the fact that there was not sufficient fall of the stream to operate the ram. Water was conveyed to the center of the town of 2,000 feet by another device—a very ingenious piece of mechanism constructed at the penitentiary by Superintendent Downing and Warden McKim. This was a current wheel, such as was known among the ancients as an Egyptian wheel. It utilizes the current of Still creek, deriving there from sufficient horse power to operate four pumps capable of carrying 17,280 gallons of water in twenty-four hours through two inch pipe to the building, a distance of 140 feet, and elevated 140 feet above the wheel. The wheel is set in a diameter with level-tined paddles and makes eighteen revolutions per minute. Its capacity is about 100 horse power and it works to a dam, pumping the water to a 9000 gallon tank on the hill. The water thus obtained is for use at the new normal school. It can also be pumped into the pipe and assist in placing the wheel in position. This work was completed yesterday and the wheel set in motion for the first time in the evening, when it pumped vigorously, evenly and successfully.

Looking Ahead.

Evidently some one out in Grant's Pass is preparing for Thanksgiving. The Courier says: When Dr. Sampson's flock of turkeys are spread out on the vacant lots near the school house, they present quite a pathetic scene. We wonder if Daniel Boone or any other renowned hunter, while calling wild turkeys within range of his rifle in the leafy woods of the Mississippi valley, ever dreamed of the day when a flock of 75 or a hundred turkeys would be feeding temporarily in the center of 2,000 inhabitants, and chasing the native grasshopper to the very walls of a school house which over 200 children were hammering their lessons. Domestication has made a vast change in the turkey since Boone's day, for the turkey from the wing once of a turkey in his Kentucky cabin, devoid of the untutored gobblers and confounding hens of over a hundred years ago. And the school house has made a vast difference with the descendants of the fowls.

Extending the Line.

Corvallis is about extending the line of street railway, by adding another mile to it. The voters of that city say that the contract for a new car, with all modern improvements has been let to Dr. H. J. Anslin, of Albany, who furnished the Albany company with their cars, and it is a credit to Albany that she has a car outside, who can successfully compete with eastern firms and build equally good cars manufactured from Oregon goods. This car will be ready in about 60 days and will be not only handsome and durable, but convenient and safe. The doors will open and shut from the drivers station as well as from the knob and in every respect it will be of the most approved and latest pattern in street horse cars.

A YOUTHFUL TRAVELER.

How Charley Orant Was Sent From Astoria to Humboldt, Cal.

Friendless and forlorn, a little boy stood on the deck of the Oregon at San Francisco on her last trip down. The child had a valise on which was a business card, on one side of which appeared the firm name of Hay & Cornelius, of this city, and on the other the child's name, Charley Orant, while under the name was the address, Humboldt, Cal. As no one appeared to claim him he was questioned, and it was found that he had been put on board the steamer by his mother by his mother in this city and sent to meet his father in Humboldt. He had no money and was taken in charge by Secretary Kemp of the Boys and Girls' Aid Society, from whom a letter was received yesterday by Messrs. Hay & Cornelius, asking for information. The child is the grandson of C. Y. Blissett, of Humboldt, and his mother and father are separated. He will be sent to his destination by Secretary Kemp.

The Oakes Sings Bell Ringers and Comedy Company.

pleased the citizens so much on their appearance here about a year ago, a coming again. They will be here on the 23rd of this month, and will be greeted by a full house, for they are good. On their appearance at Huron, Dakota, the leader of that place said: "Those who attended the vocal and instrumental treat at the opera house last Saturday night pronounced the Oakes Sings Bell Ringers and Comedy Company a little out of the common order of traveling troupes. They frequently stirred the house in attendance, who favorably expressed themselves in relation to the entire exercise. The solos were excellent. The English comedian, Harry Eades, with his north provoking mimicry and his funny face, interested the crowd amazingly. Frank Hollister, the artistic banjoist and character vocalist, was engaged to the echo. It was an acceptable and interesting affair. The company will do well to come again."
