

Morning Daily Herald

DAILY AND WEEKLY TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

DAILY Published every morning except Monday. Five cents per copy, per week 25 cents, per month 75 cents, per year $2.50.

WEEKLY Published every Friday Morning. One cent per annum, in advance. Single copies 5 cents.

THE STATES, Sale of the Albany Postoffice... Albany, N. Y. 1220 A. M. The West Side... 11 A. M. The East Side... 11 A. M. The North Side... 11 A. M.

ORION PACIFIC TIME TABLE Arrives Albany... Albany, N. Y. 11:55 A. M. 12:30 P. M. 5:25 P. M. 6:30 P. M.

PERMANENT INSTITUTIONS.

Every indication in the political horizon of the nations of the earth is that republics have come to stay. France has been imitated as the unstable of that class of governments and prognostications of its reverting back to a monarchy have been rife. But it has cruelly belied the predictions of political prophets. Two years ago the impression was general that a revolution was inevitable. It was said that the time had arrived for a change of government, and the terms of the various regime since 1789 were ingeniously calculated to show that the republic had reached its limit. But these sagacious seers omitted one factor in their calculations which is of the utmost importance. When the revolution of 1789 was precipitated the mass of the people were unprepared for civil liberty, and the various governments which followed each other down to the organization of the present republic were educational steps, each one of which added to the enlightenment of the people. There is no record of a nation gliding suddenly and successfully from absolutism to perfect freedom. The English-speaking nations are the freest on earth, but they became so only after hundreds of years of struggle and preparation. If the agitators in Russia were to gain their object to-day, and overthrow the Romanoffs, the progress of the Russian masses toward enlightened liberty would be very slow, and through much greater excesses, in all probability, than characterized the early struggles of the French people. A century is a short time in the life of a nation, and if the French republic is now established upon a secure basis, the surprise should really be that it has been so easily accomplished, and that the French people have shown such wonderful adaptability there are strong reasons for believing that the republic has come to stay, and that the political excitement which preceded the Paris exhibition was misunderstood by the public. The latter now appears to have been caused by the spirit of discontent working in all districts only, and the ambition of factions not identified in any true sense with the great majority of the French people. The present cabinet was not considered a strong one when it was formed, but it is pre-eminently a working cabinet, and in the main judicious. It dispensed the burden of monarchism by releasing the Duke of Orleans, and it could now remove the last vestige of discontent by annulling the absurd proceedings instituted against Boulanger while he was an exile. When the leading members of a party or faction begin to fight among themselves and expose the secrets of the organization, the movement is no longer formidable unless the government renews its vitality by giving it undue importance. France has a great destiny before her as the pioneer of civil liberty on the continent of Europe. Even royalty itself has lost its fear of the grim specter by growing accustomed to it, and the tendency now is to cultivate the friendship of this republic, which has displayed such extraordinary recuperative energy and such capacity for defense in spite of its isolation.

Every indication in the political horizon of the nations of the earth is that republics have come to stay. France has been imitated as the unstable of that class of governments and prognostications of its reverting back to a monarchy have been rife. But it has cruelly belied the predictions of political prophets. Two years ago the impression was general that a revolution was inevitable. It was said that the time had arrived for a change of government, and the terms of the various regime since 1789 were ingeniously calculated to show that the republic had reached its limit. But these sagacious seers omitted one factor in their calculations which is of the utmost importance. When the revolution of 1789 was precipitated the mass of the people were unprepared for civil liberty, and the various governments which followed each other down to the organization of the present republic were educational steps, each one of which added to the enlightenment of the people. There is no record of a nation gliding suddenly and successfully from absolutism to perfect freedom. The English-speaking nations are the freest on earth, but they became so only after hundreds of years of struggle and preparation. If the agitators in Russia were to gain their object to-day, and overthrow the Romanoffs, the progress of the Russian masses toward enlightened liberty would be very slow, and through much greater excesses, in all probability, than characterized the early struggles of the French people. A century is a short time in the life of a nation, and if the French republic is now established upon a secure basis, the surprise should really be that it has been so easily accomplished, and that the French people have shown such wonderful adaptability there are strong reasons for believing that the republic has come to stay, and that the political excitement which preceded the Paris exhibition was misunderstood by the public. The latter now appears to have been caused by the spirit of discontent working in all districts only, and the ambition of factions not identified in any true sense with the great majority of the French people. The present cabinet was not considered a strong one when it was formed, but it is pre-eminently a working cabinet, and in the main judicious. It dispensed the burden of monarchism by releasing the Duke of Orleans, and it could now remove the last vestige of discontent by annulling the absurd proceedings instituted against Boulanger while he was an exile. When the leading members of a party or faction begin to fight among themselves and expose the secrets of the organization, the movement is no longer formidable unless the government renews its vitality by giving it undue importance. France has a great destiny before her as the pioneer of civil liberty on the continent of Europe. Even royalty itself has lost its fear of the grim specter by growing accustomed to it, and the tendency now is to cultivate the friendship of this republic, which has displayed such extraordinary recuperative energy and such capacity for defense in spite of its isolation.

Every indication in the political horizon of the nations of the earth is that republics have come to stay. France has been imitated as the unstable of that class of governments and prognostications of its reverting back to a monarchy have been rife. But it has cruelly belied the predictions of political prophets. Two years ago the impression was general that a revolution was inevitable. It was said that the time had arrived for a change of government, and the terms of the various regime since 1789 were ingeniously calculated to show that the republic had reached its limit. But these sagacious seers omitted one factor in their calculations which is of the utmost importance. When the revolution of 1789 was precipitated the mass of the people were unprepared for civil liberty, and the various governments which followed each other down to the organization of the present republic were educational steps, each one of which added to the enlightenment of the people. There is no record of a nation gliding suddenly and successfully from absolutism to perfect freedom. The English-speaking nations are the freest on earth, but they became so only after hundreds of years of struggle and preparation. If the agitators in Russia were to gain their object to-day, and overthrow the Romanoffs, the progress of the Russian masses toward enlightened liberty would be very slow, and through much greater excesses, in all probability, than characterized the early struggles of the French people. A century is a short time in the life of a nation, and if the French republic is now established upon a secure basis, the surprise should really be that it has been so easily accomplished, and that the French people have shown such wonderful adaptability there are strong reasons for believing that the republic has come to stay, and that the political excitement which preceded the Paris exhibition was misunderstood by the public. The latter now appears to have been caused by the spirit of discontent working in all districts only, and the ambition of factions not identified in any true sense with the great majority of the French people. The present cabinet was not considered a strong one when it was formed, but it is pre-eminently a working cabinet, and in the main judicious. It dispensed the burden of monarchism by releasing the Duke of Orleans, and it could now remove the last vestige of discontent by annulling the absurd proceedings instituted against Boulanger while he was an exile. When the leading members of a party or faction begin to fight among themselves and expose the secrets of the organization, the movement is no longer formidable unless the government renews its vitality by giving it undue importance. France has a great destiny before her as the pioneer of civil liberty on the continent of Europe. Even royalty itself has lost its fear of the grim specter by growing accustomed to it, and the tendency now is to cultivate the friendship of this republic, which has displayed such extraordinary recuperative energy and such capacity for defense in spite of its isolation.

Every indication in the political horizon of the nations of the earth is that republics have come to stay. France has been imitated as the unstable of that class of governments and prognostications of its reverting back to a monarchy have been rife. But it has cruelly belied the predictions of political prophets. Two years ago the impression was general that a revolution was inevitable. It was said that the time had arrived for a change of government, and the terms of the various regime since 1789 were ingeniously calculated to show that the republic had reached its limit. But these sagacious seers omitted one factor in their calculations which is of the utmost importance. When the revolution of 1789 was precipitated the mass of the people were unprepared for civil liberty, and the various governments which followed each other down to the organization of the present republic were educational steps, each one of which added to the enlightenment of the people. There is no record of a nation gliding suddenly and successfully from absolutism to perfect freedom. The English-speaking nations are the freest on earth, but they became so only after hundreds of years of struggle and preparation. If the agitators in Russia were to gain their object to-day, and overthrow the Romanoffs, the progress of the Russian masses toward enlightened liberty would be very slow, and through much greater excesses, in all probability, than characterized the early struggles of the French people. A century is a short time in the life of a nation, and if the French republic is now established upon a secure basis, the surprise should really be that it has been so easily accomplished, and that the French people have shown such wonderful adaptability there are strong reasons for believing that the republic has come to stay, and that the political excitement which preceded the Paris exhibition was misunderstood by the public. The latter now appears to have been caused by the spirit of discontent working in all districts only, and the ambition of factions not identified in any true sense with the great majority of the French people. The present cabinet was not considered a strong one when it was formed, but it is pre-eminently a working cabinet, and in the main judicious. It dispensed the burden of monarchism by releasing the Duke of Orleans, and it could now remove the last vestige of discontent by annulling the absurd proceedings instituted against Boulanger while he was an exile. When the leading members of a party or faction begin to fight among themselves and expose the secrets of the organization, the movement is no longer formidable unless the government renews its vitality by giving it undue importance. France has a great destiny before her as the pioneer of civil liberty on the continent of Europe. Even royalty itself has lost its fear of the grim specter by growing accustomed to it, and the tendency now is to cultivate the friendship of this republic, which has displayed such extraordinary recuperative energy and such capacity for defense in spite of its isolation.

tors really means the extension and enlargement of the protective system. As Mr. Blaine remarks, "The enjoyment of reciprocity is the safeguard of protection. The defeat of reciprocity is the opportunity of free trade." The trouble in viewing this is that anything coming from the source that this tariff reciprocity consideration came from, is immediately derided without consideration, because a partisan spirit will not accept from that source even a good thing.

MANY rich New Yorkers are showing how poor is their Americanism by aping the fashions of the British aristocracy. The result is usually that they make themselves as ridiculous as the Anglo-manics who persist in wearing "topcoats" that are a full liner shorter than the garments underneath. The so-called fox hunting on Long Island and in New Jersey is a mere farce, for the hounds follow a bag which has the peculiar odor of Reynolds and the riders attempt to ride across a rough country, which they can seldom do without great risk to their necks. No comes Austin Corbin, the railroad millionaire, who has bought a large tract of 20,000 acres of woodland in New Hampshire and is stocking it with wild game. He has moose, elk, deer and buffalo, but his latest acquisition is seven wild boars from Germany of a fierce breed, warranted to show fight when hunted. It seems absurd to establish such a game preserve as this in a country where sport may be obtained by a railroad ride of a day or less from any of the large cities; but the ownership of this place will probably flatter the pride of Corbin and make him imagine that he enjoys the peculiar distinction which is always accorded to a great landed proprietor in England.

A Ripe Old Age. J. H. Holcome and wife, of Belcher, Texas, have celebrated their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary, and are still hale and hearty. The secret of their long life and good health is that they correct any slight ailment promptly, and in that way avoid serious sickness. Like most every one else, they are more frequently troubled with constipation than any other physical disorder. To correct this they take St. Patrick's Pills in preference to any other, because, as Mr. Holcome says, "They are a mild pill and, besides, keep the whole system in good order. We prize them very highly." For sale by Foshay & Mason, Druggists.

French Tansy Wafers. These wafers are a sure and safe specific for all kinds of female troubles and will remove all obstructions to the monthly periods, no matter what the cause. They are just what every woman needs, and can be used safely. For sale by the Livingstone Medicine Co., manufacturers, Portland, Oregon, also from our sole agent, F. A. Cumming, druggist, Broadway block, Albany, Oregon.

Jackets and Waists. I am now receiving my fall and winter stock of ladies, misses, and children jackets and waists which are of the latest style and most valuable and cheap as star and goods can be bought. I have a lot of ladies Newmarkets carried over from last year, which I am selling at cost to make room for new arrivals. SAMUEL E. YOUNG.

CASH BUYS RIGHT. GO TO THE NEW YORK C. B. R. STORE FOR BARGAINS.

Not selling at cost, but at prices that defy competition. Call and get prices. Our motto is "live and let live, quick sales and small profits." Don't forget the place, McFarland Block, Albany, N. Y.

E. C. SEARLS DEALER IN

Exclusive Agency for the Ludlow Fine Shoes. BERENBERG BLOCK

The City Liquor Store M. BAUMGART, Proprietor.

JULIUS JOSEPH Manufacturer of Choice Cigars

FINE IMPORTED AND KEY WEST Cigars, Plug and Smoking Tobaccos, Meerschaum and Briar Pipes, etc.

WANTED Ten thousand Men Women and Children to buy goods of DEYOE & FROMAN BROS.

Importers and Dealers in all kinds of guns and ammunition, fishing tackle of every description, cutlery and base ball goods, tennis, hammocks and camp chairs. The largest stock south of Portland. Come one and all. No trouble to show goods. Quick sales and small profits is our motto. Also a repair shop connected with store and first-class workmen to do all kinds of work.

Advertisement for W. L. Douglas shoes, featuring a portrait of a man and a list of shoe prices for men, women, and children.

SPRINGFIELD SAWMILL A. WHEELER, SPRINGFIELD, PROPRIETOR.

Springfield sawmill advertisement detailing the quality of lumber and contact information for A. Wheeler.

PHYSICIANS

C. J. CHAMBERLIN, M. D., Homeopathic physician, office at Dr. Wallace's old stand, Broadway at 4th. Office hours, 7 to 9 A. M., 1 to 3 and 6 to 8 P. M.

M. H. ELLIS, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, Albany, Oregon. W. H. DAVIS, M. D. PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON. Can be found at his office in Strahan's block, First street, Albany, Oregon.

J. ROSSITER, VETERINARY SURGEON, graduate of Ontario Veterinary college and member of the Ontario Veterinary medical society, prepared to treat the diseases of all domestic animals on scientific principles. Office at Ann Marshall's livery stable, residence 4th and Calapoo streets, Albany, Oregon.

D. E. A. McALPIN, HOMEOPATHIC PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON. Has removed his office into Crowder's block. All calls promptly attended to.

D. R. G. A. WHITNEY, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON. Graduate of Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City. Possessor of woman's specialty. Office in residence on 7th street, between Chapin and Vine, Albany, Oregon.

D. R. J. PATON, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, residence 4th and Calapoo streets, Albany, Oregon. Female diseases a specialty. Also in home on the office day or night.

STENOGRAPHER. W. E. FORNEY, STENOGRAPHER, 26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY. D. J. BARNES, STENOGRAPHER, 100 N. 3rd ST., PHOENIX, ARIZONA.

W. E. FORNEY, STENOGRAPHER, 26 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY. D. J. BARNES, STENOGRAPHER, 100 N. 3rd ST., PHOENIX, ARIZONA.

Advertisement for 'SANTAL' medicine, claiming to be 'THE KING OF CONSUMPTION' and effective for various ailments like asthma, coughs, and chest diseases.

Advertisement for 'VICTORINA' hair cream, featuring an illustration of a woman's face and text describing its benefits for hair.

Advertisement for 'The Best Shoes in the Market' by G. W. Simpson, featuring an illustration of a shoe and text about quality and price.

Advertisement for 'JULIUS GRADWOHL'S GOLDEN RULE BAZAAR', describing it as the leading crockery, fancy goods and toy store.

Advertisement for 'FOR PURE DRUGS TOILET AND FANCY GOODS' by G. L. Blackman, listing various pharmaceutical and household items.

Advertisement for 'Oregon State Fair, '90', 15th Annual Exhibition, held from September 15, 1900, with a prize fund of over $15,000.

Advertisement for 'Pavilion Open' at the Oregon State Fair, featuring a field of horses and fine exhibitions of racing.

Advertisement for 'ALBANY BAKERY' by Farker Bros., proprietors, offering a variety of breads, cakes, and pastries.

Yaquina Route

OREGON PACIFIC RAILROAD AND Oregon Development Steamship Line 225 MILES SHORTER AND 22 Hours Less Time Than by any other route.

Accommodations unsurpassed for comfort, safety. Rates and freights via Yaquina the Oregon Development company's ships, much less than by any other route.

THE COMPANY reserve the right to change routes or sailing dates without notice. Remember the Oregon Pacific has the best excursion rates, low rates on tickets are on sale.

THE MOUNT SHASTA ROUTE California express trains run only between Portland and Corvallis.

PULLMAN BUFFETS SLEEPERS. TOURIST SLEEPING CARS. For accommodation of Second-Class Passengers attached to Express trains.

Advertisement for 'UNION PACIFIC OVERLAND ROUTE TICKET', highlighting the scenic route and service between Portland and Corvallis.

OMAHA, COUNCIL BLUFFS, KANSAS CITY, CHICAGO AND ST. LOUIS. Elegant New Dining Cars with Change.

JOHN SCHNEER'S Livory, Feed & Sale Stable. Also an advertisement for Foshay & Mason, druggists and booksellers.