THE Brazilian Republic has been recognized by Great Britain after eleven months of hesitation and delay. The last pretext for inaction vanished a month ago, when the Government was sustained in the general elections, and orders have finally been given for official recognition. This reluctance on the part of England to accept the downfall of the Empire as an accomplished fact has been bitterly resented in Brazil. Americans have a most favorable opportunity for obtaining commercial concessions in that quarter and for strengthening their moral influence over that vast republican State.
