The building is heated by a furnace in the basement and lighted by electricity.

IS IT PRACTICAL.

The New Style of Railroad That is Proposed.

From east of the mountains comes a dispatch that something new in railroad construction is proposed. It is that a new railroad company was incorporated at Union, with a capital stock of $100,000; incorporators, J. B. Mahana, J. W. Shelton, E. S. McCombes, S. O. Swackhammer and L. J. Davis. The objects are to build, equip and operate railroads on an entirely new system as invented by J. B. Mahana.

The new company is named the Single-Rail and Saddle-Car Company. The new system can be operated either by steam or electricity, and contains principles that are certain to cause a revolution in railroading.

The models have been put to the severest tests during the past few days. It is claimed, and it has been thoroughly and scientifically demonstrated, that the new system can be constructed, equipped and operated at less than one-half the present system. It removes all likelihood of accidents resulting from the derailment of trains, no fences, telegraph or road crossings are necessary. It removes all liabilities of killing stock, of sand and snow blockades, and is the only system which renders it practical to use electricity so as to utilize the force expended in descending grades as to assist in climbing another. Plans for the construction of a practical road are now being made.

The development of all that is claimed for the new invention will certainly lead to a thorough revolution in the railroad building and operating business.
