OUR REPRESENTATION.

Among the earliest matters taken up at the present session of congress will undoubtedly be the subject of congressional appointment; that is assigning to the several states the number of members of the house of representatives, to which each shall be entitled during the present decade. This duty is imposed upon congress by the constitution, and there is no reason why it should be postponed or neglected.

Inasmuch as representation must be proportionate to population, it is evident that the increase in the population of the United States since 1880 necessitates a readjustment. The ratio of increase has been very different in different states, so that the same relative number of representatives can not be retained under any system that may be adopted for reapportioning.

One of two propositions must be accepted. Either the unit of representation must be increased or the whole number of representatives must be increased. The present unit of representation is 151,912, that is, there is, at least in theory, one representative to each 151,912 people, although since each State must have at least one representative the proportion is not actually preserved.

The bill introduced at the last session by Mr. Dunnell, chairman of the committee on apportionment, provided that the ratio of unit of representation should be 180,000. This was based on an estimated population of 65,000,000, and would have resulted in a house of 354 members. Now that the census figures show a population of only 62,000,000 there will have to be a new calculation made.

But instead of making such a large increase in the ratio of representation it is strenuously urged that the increase in the ratio should be very small, if any, and that the membership of the house should be increased, and there is much to be said for this view of the question, especially is this true in view of the low figures which came from the grist in Mr. Porter's census mill.

Oregon should have had another congressman but after the bungling and unjust manner in which the census was taken in this state. We should perhaps be thankful that we have Congressmen Hermann left.

The News Advertiser of Vancouver, B. C., has not been fooled by the result of the recent elections. In its issue of the 11th it said: "The English press and people appear to be laboring under a great misapprehension in respect to the importance which should be attached to the result of the elections in the United States." The writer then goes on to show that the result was due to a variety of causes, and not to dissatisfaction with the McKinley bill, as the British press and people had too hastily assumed, and then ends with this sage observation: We may be of the opinion that the present course pursued by the people of the United States is detrimental to their own interest, but the experience of the last twenty-five years shows that it has received continuous support, and that, whether as the result of in or in spite of it, the national wealth has grown a pace unprecedented in the history of the world.

The president of the Farmers Alliance predicts that the government will own and operate the Central and Union Pacific Railroads, inside of four years. If the Alliance would bend its energies to the accomplishment of that purpose it might accomplish a desirable end, and bring about many necessary reforms. But if it bends its energies towards the accomplishment of sub-treasury schemes and government warehouse operations it will waste its energies for naught, and in the end gain the distrust of the people. Practical reformatory measures are coming to view in rapid enough succession to give employment to all the farmers associations without entering into any impracticable visionary schemes.

Many persons have perhaps wondered why Indiana, which gave Harrison a majority in 1888, should have gone democratic by 15,000 in 1890. The explanation is simple. In 1888 the republican vote was 263,371; in 1860 it was only 214,302. In 1888 the two side-show tickets cast a trifle over 12,000 votes; in 1890 they polled 29,000 votes. In 1893 the republican stay-aways will go to the polls, and those who coquetted with side issues in 1890 will return to their allegiance and Indians will wheel into line again. It should never be forgotten that the republican vote always drops off in off years.

The arrangements for the World's Fair are now so far advanced that the commissioners announce that all is ready for President Harrison to issue his formal proclamation to nations of the world, stating that the Fair is to be held and inviting them to participate. This is a definite stage of progress. The preliminary arrangements have been completed. But that is all. The site has been chosen. The selection of plans for the buildings and the erection of these are all in the future.
