IMMIGRATION.

THE report which Surgeon-General Hamilton has just subbmitted to the secretary of the treasury presents the results of his recent observations in the principal seaport of Europe, from which the great mass of our immigrants, set out for the New World. These observations were not reassuring, and he discovered nothing while carrying on his investigations abroad that promised much improvement in the general character of current and future immigrations. He found, as a rule, that immigrants bound to the United States are not required to undergo any proper inspection. Most foreign governments are opposed to the emigration of their people to this country, and if in instances they seem to connive at, or even to encourage it, the emigration so favored will always be found to be of that class which the native land in this case can spare most advantageously. All persons likely to become a public charge, as well as the vicious, lawless, and dangerous element of society are permitted, perhaps encouraged, to emigrate without check or regret, and to this fact the greatly deteriorated character of out later immigration is undoubtedly attributable. In the last six years the number of immigrants arriving on our shores has amounted to 2,666,256. Dr. Hamilton very justly remarks that the introduction into our political, commercial, industrial, and social system of this vast number of people, most of whom are utterly unacquainted with our traditions, customs, history, and laws, presents a difficult and perilous problem to the practical statesmanship of the country, and constitutes a subject for careful consideration, not unmingled with apprehension on the part of serious-minded citizens of all parties. He calls attention to the fact that a large proportion of this immigration does not diffuse itself throughout the country, and so become lost in the general characteristics and modes of life of the American people, but that it preserves foreign nationalistic relations, going to the length, as has been shown in Chicago, New York and New Orleans, of even maintaining assassination societies, in which the bidding of a secret tribunal is implicity obeyed, in violation of our laws and of all their guarantees for the preservation of peace, good order and personal security. Now, Dr. Hamilton contends that all citizens already on our soil have a right to be protected against this kind of immigration. Last year, at New York, the port medical officer reported fifteen insane immigrants and eleven idiots. Four of the sane and the idiots were allowed to land. In such cases the law should be strictly enforced. The time is believed to have arrived when any further influx of persons not bringing with them habits of industry and thrift, or possessing skill in some department of labor, or able to contribute somethidg to the material wealth or well-being of the country should be restricted. Thus to legislate for the restriction of immigration implies no hostility to foreigners, far less to our naturalized citizens. Our door should always be open wide enough to admit all worthy comers, but our immigrants should be "of such a character morally, intellectually, and physically as would make them more or less valuable additions to the body politic." The suggestions of the report may be briefly stated. It should be provided by law that an intending immigrant shall produce satisfactory evidence, of an official character, before the nearest American consul, showing that he has never been convicted of a crime, has never been a charge upon the country nor received public assistance. He shall also file with such evidence a certificate from a duly qualified physician showing his freedom from chronic disease or any disability which would make him a public charge. If satisfied, the consul will then issue his certificate, to be delivered by the immigrant to the proper officer at the port of arrival, and to be by him accepted as evidence that the new comer possesses the preliminary qualifications for American citizenship. If this plan were adopted it would add greatly to the importance and utility of our consular service, and it would effectually check the further influx of pauper, disabled or criminal immigrants.

THE King of the Netherland's remains was laid at rest at The Hague yesterday, and the little girl Queen, has all the weight and responsibility of the government resting on her shoulders before she should quit playing with her doll babies. Her mother as Queen Regent will without doubt perform the duties of the office to the satisfaction of the inhabitants and relief of the girl Queen. The situation makes a keen sarcastic view of the monarchial business in human government.
