Other bills have contemplated receiving a certificate only of good character from the intending immigrant and of freedom from mental or physical disability that might make him a public charge. But Mr. Lodge would have our government do more than this, and receive of new-comers proof of a certain degree of intelligence. His test would demand that applicants for certificates should be able to read and write their native languag . Popular ignorance is one of the chief perils that menace a republic, and we have an apalling mass of illiteracy of our own, without drawing on the unlimited supply in Europe. The exclusion of illiterate foreigners would benefit this country in two ways. It outlito endel el the growth of the ignorant and credulous classes of our population, whose existence ant increase are, socially, and politically considered, the statesman's despair and the demagogue's opportunity, and it would also supplement the wholesome operation of the protective tariff in maintaining the high standards of American labor.
