If reports are true, something like retribution appears to have overtaken Prince Morgan, the 15 year old colored boy of Sheild, whose left hand was shattered by the premature discharge of a shotgun. He obtained the gun by faking a Wells Fargo order at Sheild while the agent was absent, and sending it to an Albany firm for the gun, a nice $40 one. The offense was soon discovered, leaving the boy without a gun. As he was so young, and it was his first dishonest act, nothing was done in the matter. Protracted Meetings. DR. R. C. HILL

A Brief Sketch of the Life of This Distinguished Albany Pioneer.

The funeral of Dr. R. C. Hill, yesterday, was attended by a large concourse of friends and relatives, among them being his son Hon. W. Lair Hill, of Seattle, and Mrs. M. A. Marks of McMinnville. The funeral services were conducted at the Baptist church by Rev. T. G. Brownson, in an impressive manner, assisted by Rev. J. C. Richardson of Eugene. Mr. Brownson read the following biographical sketch of this well known pioneer: But a few short months ago a mother in Israel entered into her eternal rest. She had lived a long, useful and honored life. Nearly sixty years she and her companion had traveled the pathway of life together, sharing together the joys and sympathizing with each other in the sorrows of life. And now her companion has fallen—fallen like a shock of corn fully ripe. He had lived to nearly 85 years old, being born in 1808. He remained in his native state and adjoining states, until he was about 40 years, in which time he had availed himself of the limited educational advantages then in that vicinity, made a public profession of faith in Christ in 1833, married Margaret Lait in 1832, entered upon the practice of medicine and was ordained to the gospel ministry in 1846. In 1850 Dr. Hill visited the Pacific Coast, remaining about two years and returning to bring his family. He settled in Benton county upon a farm almost the entire management of which was entrusted to other members of the family, while he gave himself to the double work of practicing medicine and preaching the gospel. Both phases of his work covered a very large area, he doing almost an incredible amount of preaching, and at the same time carrying on a large medical practice. He was especially successful in holding revival services, having in fact in his lifetime more than one thousand rejoicing converts whom he had been instrumental in leading to Christ. He was a preacher of exceptional power, logical, fervent, winning, evangelistic, magnetic, his sermons from the churches that were organized by him, and some of which he ministered to regularly for many years, he preached in many destitute communities where the gospel had not been preached. During the first year of his life in Oregon, while he had a large practice, he perhaps still more of his time and strength to religious work. He was prominently identified with the founding of the Baptist college at McMinnville and a member of its board of trustees from that time up to the day of his death. In that board his opinions and counsels had great weight. About 1870 the institution came into crisis. It had no invested funds and accumulating debts. He decided to undertake to raise an endowment fund, the success of which efforts was believed to depend upon Dr. Hill's undertaking the arduous duties of a financial agent, and accumulating debts. He was having a lucrative practice, yet he decided to accept a much smaller income, that he might accomplish an important work in the interest of Christian education. In many respects he was admirably fitted for this work, having profound convictions as to the need of institutions of higher learning under positive Christian control, and especially having very strong conviction as to the importance of an educated ministry. Not being a college graduate, he appears for higher education had the greater effect. Possibly no college educated man ever graduated on the Pacific Coast for a thoroughly educated ministry more earnestly and more conscientiously than Dr. Hill. Whether we look at Dr. Hill as a citizen, a business man, a physician, a preacher, or an advocate of higher education, there can be but one verdict, that his life was a success. OREGON FRUIT.

Its World-wide Fame Thoroughly and Fully Deserved.

Oregon, especially Western Oregon, has established the reputation of being the most productive fruit region of the world. Its equable climate, moist atmosphere, and freedom from cyclonic storms, makes it perfectly possible to establish and retain this reputation. Small fruits and berries of all description flourish remarkably in western Oregon, the grapes and grapes do fairly well, but apples, plums and cherries are the wonder of every stranger who beholds them in their luxuriant prime. Our climate does not require the term of years that almost every other country calls for to bring the trees to bearing, for comparatively speaking they bear almost from the year of transplanting, and one of the cares of the painstaking and successful orchardist is to prevent overbearing. The fame of Oregon fruit has gone wide over the land. No other locality in the United States can compare with our state in the production of this valuable and staple product, and no other locality in the world can surpass it. This fact has become so thoroughly established that the industry of extending and growing in a remarkable degree each recurring year. Every berry within reach has been taxed to its utmost to fill the demand for the leading varieties of fruit during the season of 1890, and the prospect for the demand will still increase for 1891. The reason for this adoption of the fruit is obvious. The fruit is a staple in the markets of the world and is also not as perishable as other and it is necessarily handled in a large area, he doing almost an incredible amount of preaching, and at the same time carrying on a large medical practice. He was especially successful in holding revival services, having in fact in his lifetime more than one thousand rejoicing converts whom he had been instrumental in leading to Christ. He was a preacher of exceptional power, logical, fervent, winning, evangelistic, magnetic, his sermons from the churches that were organized by him, and some of which he ministered to regularly for many years, he preached in many destitute communities where the gospel had not been preached. THE RIVER AND BOATS.

The Oregon Pacific's River Steamers Will Resume Traffic To-Day.

The river has raised until it is now 10 inches above low water mark, and is slowly rising. The Oregon Pacific's steamboat, the Thres Sisters, will be down from Corvallis to-day, and the boats will begin running regularly at once. A large amount of wheat awaits shipment along the river, which will now begin to move. The resumption of river traffic means more than is generally supposed, as a considerable amount of wheat stored at various river points will at once be moved, which will put a large amount of money in circulation. It is likely that the Union Pacific's boats will not run this season, but the Oregon Pacific's fleets and an independent steamer will be put on the upper Willamette will make traffic lively. A Novel Punishment for Criminals in Pennsylvania. As is well known, Major Robert W. Estabrook, formerly of this city and recently warden of the State Penitentiary at Joliet, is now the successful warden of the State Reformatory at Huntingdon, Pa. He has conceived and adopted a new system of punishment for such institutions, which will doubtless provoke extended discussions at the next World's Prison Congress. One day the sharp-eyed Major, detecting one of the inmates in a violation of the rules of the shop, picked up a leather sole and offered to a thought and impressed offender to a good people of this wholesome and touching that it came to the Major as an inspiration that he had stumbled across the ideal sixteenth century system of punishment. He adapted the process at once and is charmed with its success. For fear that exaggerated reports of the punishment might reach the public and accusations of undue severity follow he concluded to confer with the higher authorities in relation to it. He interviewed the Governor of Pennsylvania and explained the plan and its workings to him. The Governor was convulsed with laughter, and said: "Major, I heartily congratulate you on having struck the keynote, and I assure you that the good people of this commonwealth will sustain you in this war measure." I pronounce you the backing of the National Guard, if necessary, in your poetic plan of spanking reformation into your rebellious subjects." He then called upon the chairman of the State Board of Charities, an old-time Quaker, and explained the situation to him. The Quaker chairman smiled broadly and said: "Major, they deserve thanks, and should go on with their noble work. It reminds me of some of our mother, who has been in heaven many a year. It was her favorite method of correction, and I tell the Major, she did it well. It was proper and humane, and I am sure that the noble and wholesome work of the boys into submission and obedience." The Major returned to his reformatory thoroughly convinced that his improved process of punishment would receive general approval. So now the weekly spanking school is a feature of the institution, and the Major's own strong right arm wields the avenging leather. The result is quite beneficial, and the infractions of the rules are less frequent and flagrant, and the inmates have a wholesome dread of the same, and are a striking proof of the Major's other-worldly spanks.—Monmouth Review.
