THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK IN RUSSIA.

The scattering of refugees, that has been caused by the intolerant action of the Russian government, in its persecution of its Jewish citizens, has brought many of that class to this country, and intensifies our interest in Russian politics

It is apparent to any observer of current events that the Russian government rests on an active volcano of revolutionary sentiment among its people. It is truthfully said that Russia is really in a worse condition than France on the eve of the revolution of 1789.

rendered desperate by their inability to procure food come as a sort of surprise. In spite of the comparative newness of our own country we seem to be freer from the encroachments of beasts of prey than the people of many lands which have been inlaid by civilized communities since the dawn of history.

When the habit of appealing to the pocket gun, for vindication or for argument, becomes a custom with individuals, it appears to stay with them with pertinacity. For instance the dispatches recently related how Bob Ford, the slayer of Jesse James, had a slight altercation with a friend over some trivial matter, when both drew their guns while standing at a saloon bar and proceeded to decorate each other. Bob's face was burned and foot lacerated while his comrade's shoulder was perforated. Great is the American gun!

The Indian war is over, with the loss of a score and more of white men and five or six times as many of the red men, and another chapter in the problem of whether it is better to treat the Indian as independent nations or dependent savages is closed. Experience is a dear school but even it does not always bring speedy conclusions.
