TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS.

The benefit of society calls for the treatment of those who have lapsed from the paths of virtue and equity, in such a manner as to form not only a protection to society, but also in as much as possible to return the wanderers to their nature and usefulness in life.

Warden Brush has not written exhaustively on this subject, but he is working on right lines at Sing Sing, and is in accord with Superintendent Brockway of Elmira in the methods of reformatory treatment.

There is one point, however, on which too much has not yet been said, and that is, to quote the Christian Union, that "no man, whatever his offense, ought ever to be discharged from restraint except upon reasonable evidence that he is morally, intellectually, and physically capable of earning an honest livelihood."

of punishment and reform in handling the criminal is the outgrowth of an intelligent study of the prison problem, and it is in pressing the treatment of prisoners so that they shall go out of prison as true men that we are using our penitentiaries to the best advantage.

A good many of those opposed to the proposed division of Linn county say they would rather lose the Albany bridge than to see the county divided. There is just the rub. The people of the Forks say they are opposed to any taxation for a bridge and will vigorously fight any appropriation for it, and if those of Albany who do not want a bridge will now just work hard enough to keep this opposition in the county, they may succeed in stopping the county appropriation for the bridge and thereby down the whole bridge question.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Oregonian from Salem says Jeff Myers is opposed to the division of Linn county, and it is not likely to pass. In view of the overwhelming majority among Mr. Myers' constituents in favor of the division, this would look like sarcasm.
