LOOK AFTER THE BOYS.

To the observing thinkers of the as regards the future welfare of cars is the best to use as regards the nation in view of the fact that freedom from carrying infection the boys of to-day are the voters from contagious diseases. The and rulers in a few years. And the training received and characters formed by these boys will decide the unavoidable standing of the nation in the near future.

It behooves the rulers of the present, the wielders of the ballot. to look after the influences that surround the boys.

Mr. Hale writes, in the February Cosmopolitan, many truths ions of this class of danger. upon this subject, that are of general application. He says that a man of public spirit in New York or in Chicago, who really wants to strengthen the chances for the future of the city or the country, will never do any better work than are almost unlimited and when he does in meeting face to face in Syrup of Figs was first produced cordial intimacy some class or club ly perfect laxative known, as it is or guild or other society of the the only remedy which is truly growing boys. Nothing is more pleasing and refreshing to the taste certain than that the hoodlims and prompt and effectual to cleanse who is now fifteen years old will time or, in fact, at any time any be twenty-one at the end of six the better it is known the more years. And the decency and popular it becomes. companionship which the hoodlum part of the city at $3 00 per cord of 1891 happens to form. Now, a thousand experiences show that character and life in the cities to do by such means precisely what is done, as a matter of course, in a spirited country town. You shall find, in a town of 2,000 people, that a good lead is given from the beginning. There is not a boy in day at the court house in the city of dignity and purity of the voter of 1897 will depend chiefly on the it is quite in the power of men of bad, it is somebody's business to see that he has good books to read, that the conditions of his home him straight, and it is to this sort other business that may legally com of "mild police" that the country boy owes that training, that steadfixtness of character, that willingness to do honest work, and that ability, in the end, to withstand appetite, which give to the ideal "country boy" that sort of moral reputation which, on the whole, he has deserved. I always like to remind the grumblers-who are infallibly people who do nothing about it-that we are steadily gaining in the matter of juvenile crime. Thanks to the work, more than princety gain, which was set on foot by the late Mr. Charles Loring Brace in New York, the proportion of crime committed by boys and girls, and brought before the courts, has been very greatly reduced. Any person who really cares for the condition of the city will do well to read the reports of the Children's Aid Society for two or three years past. There is a the comt house in Albany. Oregon, for the fair illustration of what America bearing of objections thereto and the settlement thereor. can do, will do, and does, when you let her solve her own problem. The English philanthropists are pleased, and well they may be. that their prison population actual ly declines in number, as does their population. They have actually made money for the Exchequer or other treasuries, by

We ought not to expect that any

Morning Daily Herald vague talk about "institutions or 'free government' or constitutional liberty" will make good men or women. This is a case where the fish are to be taken by the hook, and never by any net, however skillfully it be woven. The boys who land here, of whateyer age, are to be taken in hand one by one, and as we succeed or fail with them, do we succeed or fail in the preservation of the republic. He who endures to the end, shall be saved." The leaders must lead if they mean to succeed. And they must do what Lamartine did when he enlisted the street boys of Paris on the side of order.

THE question of contagious diseases, and the means of conveying the contagion, is one of importance, and is engaging attention. The people are interested in every phase of such a question, and recent inquiries in regard to railway travel in connection with the subject is meeting with considerable discussion. The question has been raised by a physician well posted in matters of railway sanitation whether the fashion of plush paneling as well as upholcountry are alive to the situation, stering for the interior of sleeping trains leading toward the various health resorts carry those suffering from consumption or other microbic diseases whose germs may remain in such surroundings. It would of course be next to impossible to trace results to cause in this particular direction, but it certainly seems as if a polished wood finish that can be readily cleaned is freer from any suspic
