He was not so lucky on starting back upstairs again, however. As he left the duning room and entered the hotel office someone shouled, "There goes President Harrison." The result was astonishing. There was a mad rush of a couple of hundred persons in the office across the floor to get a glimpse of the presi-dent. Those outside no ing this rush and surmising the cause, also sarged into the office, and about one minute there was a jammed hard-breathing and sardine-packed mass of humanity. The president looked at the demonstration in evident alarm and hesitated which way to turn. Suddenly he spied the elevator, and was quickly before it. That it was the freight elevator did not matter the slightest. The president hastily got in after. He has on hand marge lot of it, and was quickly carried upstairs by the grinning elevator
