HAS IT BEEN ATTAINED?

The dream and work of visionary inventors for ages has been a perpetual motion. One, or in fact, the principal obstacle to overcome has been friction. The Washington Post is sanguine that the overcoming of that difficulty has been attained. It says that a recent invention promises to be more far reaching in its immediate practical results than any which has preceded it in the annals of mechanical discovery. It consists in the use of hardened steel ball bearings for all wheels, pullies, or revolving shafts, with a view to accelerated speed and many other incidental advantages by reducing friction to a minimum and almost inappreciable quantity. The bicycle system of bearings furnishes an illustration of the principle, but with only partial and imperfect adaption. Here the defects of the latter are remedied, and the principal given such large and apparently illimitable scope as to foreshadow what may not inaptly be termed the millennium of merchanical art. The pulleys have been in operation at the power-house of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company for several weeks have demonstrated to the satisfaction of a great number of scientific and practical men, many of them attendants upon the late patent congress and others of high and authoritative standing in the government departments, that the abolishment of friction, which has long been the dream of a multitude of original thinkers, is finally an accomplished fact. Two of the pulleys mentioned have been in use for three weeks, carrying the railway cable, requiring no attention, generating no heat and performing their work admirably in all respects. Two other pulleys have been running for about ten days and twelve hours a day, merely for exhibition, one of which is driven with a thread of No. 200 spool cotton to a speed of 1,200 revolutions per minute, without oil or any other lubricant and absolutely without heating; the plane sufaces that are exposed to the bearings and the bearings themselves being at no time raised above the normal temperature of cold steel. It is thus conclusively shown that where no heat is developed there is no friction, and if no friction there is no wear. The substantial merits of this new motive appliance are apparent to all who have observed its operations. The simplicity of the principle involved is so obvious that a child can understand it; the success of its application is so conclusive and unanswerable as to disarm criticism. Spherical bearings, that present to a plane surface but one point of contract, are practically indestructible by attrition. Experiment has shown that when of proper material and construction they cannot be worn away or out of shape. To the applicability of an invention that thus virtually ahnnilates friction, dispels heat, and does away with the use of lubricating oils there is no limit. It can evidently be made as available for the wheels of railway cars as for the pulleys that support the cables. It has been already successfully introduced in the running gear of ordinary vehicles, to the great saving of horse-power and entire relief from the annoyance and unsightliness of the grease that is now the common disfigurement of carriage axles.

THE drive well patent swindle, by which many an honest farmer was robbed of hard earned dollars, not many years ago, is likely to be duplicated in a similar manner. The Scientific American has an illustration and a description of a patent recently procured by John Owen Rice of Hutchinson, Minn. The description says that the well is dug down to the water bearing stratum, at which point is built a reservoir of brick cement or wood, provided with perforations to admit the water, and arched over the top. At some point in the arched top preferably at the center is inserted a tabe which extends from the bottom of the reservoir to the pump above. The lower end of the pipe being perforated to let the water enter, and the space above the arched top of the reservoir is filled with stone gravel and earth in the order named. There are thousands of just such wells in constant use all over this part of Oregon, and have been in use for years and John Owen Rice has no more right to a patent upon them than has the man in the moon, for he had no more to do with originating them than did the man in the moon. They were in use before he was in existence. Probably the next move in the game will be to send an army of agents all over the country to try and collect a princely fortune out of the men who are now using these wells— just as was done in the drive well business. The patent office examiners should have knowledge, discernment and honesty enough to refuse patents to all such devises. No man has any right to a patent upon processes that have been in common use, and are of universal knowledge, simply in order to empower him to lay tribute upon people who are using the processes. Such cases bring the great patent business into disrepute and disfavor.

A QUARTER OF A CENTURY AGO

There settled in Baker county Oregon, near what is now Baker City, a man who has since become identified with the resources and development of that country. This man is no other than Mr. John Stewart, one of the wealthiest and most influential citizens in the county. In a recent letter he says: "I had been suffering from pains in my back and general kidney complaint for some time, and had used many remedies without any but temporary relief. The pains in my back had become so severe that I was prevented from attending to my work and could not move without the use of a cane. Hearing, through a friend, of the wonderful cures effort by Oregon Kidney Tea, I was induced to try a box, and from that very first dose I found instant relief, and before using half the contents of the box the pains in my back entirely disappeared. I have every faith in the virtues of the Oregon Kidney Tea, and can conscientiously recommend it to my friends. I would not be without it for anything."

Oregon Kidney Tea cures headache, incontinence of urine, brick dust sediment, burning or painful sensation while urinating, and all affections of the kidney or urinary organs of either sex.
