sometimes rude to richer or more fashionable people, in order to show their independence. This is less ignoble than the European fashion, but it is more detrimental to those who are guilty of it. In business, it is very poor policy indeed. Many American tradesmen and mechanics, many milliners and dressmakers, have failed because of the rudeness which they suppose would maintain their dignity. and which customers, who themselves would never be uncivil, were unable to endure. Polite attention to a customer's wishes, the little "thank you" on receipt of an order, marked courtesy to every one-in short, the constant observance of the Golden Rule, has made the fortune of many a many and many a woman. One millionaire in the dry-goods business ascribes his prosperity in a large degree to the fact that he never permitted an impertinently "independent" clerk to remain behind his counter. It is an old adage that "manners make the man." They certainly have a good deal to do with the making

That the base of all prosperity in the country is the agricultural pursuits is acknowledged by all political economists. Reeve, in Belford's Monthly says that one year of non-production would empty our warehouses and silence our mills; two years of non-production, and the accumulated wealth of the nation would be exhausted in the purchase of food. The scarce possibility of such a condition is no cause for the statement, but to emphasize the fact of our dependence upon a continuously successful agriculture. According to the statistician at Washington, exclusive of cotton and tobacco, the proportion of agricultural products exported is about 5 per cent and in compari-
