A number of fakirs are doing this city just now. There is the mermaid that never existed, the stale ball throwing at rag babies, the only variation being that it is a "Chinese" instead of "nigger" babies. They all gather in a few nickels, but do not look as well fed as formerly.

River Intelligence. The Bentley came up last night on her regular trip and tied up at the dock. The Three Sisters, with Captain Sherman Short in command, came down from Corvallis with a load of pottery and wool.

The Hoag has been taken below and will be generally repaired and put in good shape. The Three Sisters draw less water than the Hoag and will run between Salem and Corvallis all summer. The Bentley will run between here and Corvallis all summer. The Bentley will run between Salem and Portland hereafter, and, when the Hoag has been put in shape, will be put on the ways and overhauled.—Salem Statesman.

A Frost in July. East Oregonian: Some thing as unusual happened Sunday night and make him die without a trial in the graveyard of the past to revive the memory of a similar occurrence. It was a frost in July. H. J. Taylor says it froze the surface of water in the troughs at his place on Wild Horse, and near Helix potato vines were nipped and thin ice formed on the water. Little or no damage was done. People who have lived in the country ever since it was a country, remember no July frost that ever occurred before.

The College won in ten innings. Score, 20 to 18. Time, 2 hours 10 minutes. Umpire, Wm. Welch.

Good Prospects. A private letter from S. Slater, a former resident of this vicinity, from his new home in Gilliam county, says that the crop prospects in that locality are fine, and that stock is doing fine, and there are lots of beef cattle. The unusual rains during May and June made plenty of grass and insured the grain crop.

Come to Stay. Portland is mourning over the alleged fact that the English sparrow has found its way to that city and secured a lodgment. Wherever it sets foot, it is said to come to stay and is a perfect nuisance. It is thought that it came via California and the Southern Pacific.

A REMARKABLE PICNIC.

It Was Made the Occasion of a Reunion of 8 Twenty-Three Relatives.

The following account of a picnic that is seldom equaled and never exceeded as a reunion of relatives, which took place Wednesday in the Hulbert grove on the old home place near Grand-Hulbert, has been recently destroyed by fire, five miles southeast of Corvallis, on the Linn county side of the river, is furnished by a correspondent on the ground:

Some years ago Grandpa Hulbert left his earthly home with all its added beauties and comforts, a monument of his labors and the appreciation of the great possibilities awaiting the lover and possessor of a magnificent piece of the Willamette's fertile soil, to take up his abode in the great beyond, where the light of heaven never ceases to shine and the fragrance of ever blooming flowers tell the story of angelic crowns.

As a parting farewell to Mrs. Allen, a sister of Mrs. Ross, of Albany, and a relative either by consanguinity or marriage to all, except the few mentioned hereafter, this picnic was given.

Early in the day buggies, wagons, carts, bicycles, horse men and footmen were seen heading toward the spot where the day's anticipated festivities were to be indulged in. By the time the finger on the dial had indicated that the sun had leaped to its meridian height, seventy-three human souls, sixty-eight of whom were related as to one family, were assembled on a beautiful sward, where the luxuriance of many Oregon summers had chased monotony from the landscape by rearing a dozen or more stately fir trees high toward the heavens, with frequent interminglings of broad-leaved indigenous maples, and their drooping foliage swinging to and fro before the visitations of an occasional passing zephyr, depicting the aspect of a grove of over-spreading palms in the tropics, where the tired traveler dreams away the heated hours of a noon-day sun by shading his sweating forehead with his hand, and the fragrance of the wild hyacinth, the twining honeysuckle and creeping verbena. To the east of this cluster of native trees evidences of the thrift of an energetic husbandman was to be seen in all its splendor, as few fertile climes than our own will sanctify a field of oats standing so thickly on the ground that at a few paces distant it presents more the appearance of a solid block of masonry painted in unvarying green, builded above the topmost rail of the surrounding fence, than of the work of the tiller's hand and harrow. To the north, on a level, grassy plot, base ball grounds had been prearranged, while under the shade trees long tables were spread, long enough had Adam and Eve been there—but, unfortunately, from circumstances over which they had no control, they were prevented from attending—they might each have taken the head of a table and looked down its stretching lines into the many chattering tongues of a whole array of their children. Thirty of Eve's own sex, the oldest scoring the mark of 73 years—Grandma Truax—whose patient life so resolutely spent in doing good will ere long invite the reaper's sickle to a golden harvest that had grown and matured in the image of her perfect, and the youngest, but a bubbling babe at its mother's breast, were there. Nor was Adam forgotten. His boys were there also. Forty-three of his sex were there. Could he have seen his lady, ranging in years from 50 down to the cradle, all hale and hearty, his pride can better be imagined than described.

As before stated this concourse was composed wholly of relatives of the Hulbert family, except a young lady from near Tazewell, a hired man working on the farm where the picnic was held, and Dr. J. L. Hill, his wife and little daughter, who were invited guests from Albany.

After a most bountiful dinner of all the good things that as good a country as this can produce, prepared by women who have attained the highest plane of culinary education that the most fastidious epicure could hope for, general congratulations were indulged in. On all sides could be heard many voices at the same time conversing with fathers, mothers, sons, daughters, grandfathers, grandmothers, brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces and every other conceivable conglomeration of relationship. From the shrill yelping of little children, each addressing the addressed in language indicative of heredity, an interested listener would imagine the line of descent of the whole human family less complex to trace than the solution of simple problems to the accomplished mathematician.

Time being called by the umpire, men and boys repaired to the baseball grounds where a spirited game was indulged in. In this game, unlike most others, no advantage could be shown by the umpire to either side, or in favor or against any individual player, for it would be derogatory to a father, son, brother, uncle or cousin of the audience.

Little boys struggled hard and ran narrow escapes of injury riding sick horses and engaging in imaginary bear fights, skinning up saplings and making brave attacks on load-trogs. The women remained in the grove drinking lemonade and unraveling the knot that would tell you just how you were related to everyone present. Big girls looked arms and strolled through pastures and fields, telling their secrets that only must be told in the family, warbling in sweeter tones than the carols of the feathered songster overhead

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

In Memory of Post Chancellor James F. Hall, of Laurel Lodge, E. of P. No. 7.

"Death never separates; the golden wires That ever tremble to the names before, Will vibrate still, though every form expires, And those who love we look upon no more."

Again has the roll been called and our beloved brother has answered "Here!" and his name is placed with the names that are written in the "Book of Gold" kept by Him, "Who doeth all things well."

Thus death has claimed him for his own before he had attained even the meridian of life, but mercy stands beside and when one we love is taken hence, she plants upon the vacant spot the bloom of consolation, and of hope, whose fragrance soothes the sorrowing soul, and tells us "we shall meet again."

Brother Hall was born in Missouri and died in Albany, Oregon, June 27, 1891, aged 29 years, and five months. He was knighted in Laurel Lodge March 15, 1888, and gained the rank of post chancellor by service December 31, 1888. He represented his lodge in the grand lodge in the sessions of 1887-8, and was D. G. G. of the district No. 5 at the time of his death. He was also captain of Columbia Division, No. 4, Uniform Rank, K. of P., which position he had held since its organization, two years since. All offices and positions of trust confided to him were filled with care and intelligence, and were filled with honor to himself and benefit to the order of which he was ever proud. Therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of James F. Hall, a valiant Pythian knight has been taken from our midst, and to us is left to mourn the irreparable loss.

Resolved, That we extend our sympathy and condolence to the relatives of our deceased brother, and especially to his mourning sister, and assure her that "Other hearts share the burdens of her grief, when a loved one lies under the pall."

Resolved, That Pythian knight-hood has suffered a sad bereavement, an inestimable loss, in the early demise of so vigorous and intelligent an advocate and member of our order.

Resolved, That as a token of kindly love and memory, the castle hall of Laurel Lodge be draped in mourning for thirty days, and that a copy of these resolutions be given to the sister of our deceased brother; also that a copy be furnished each of the city papers for publication.
