OREGON PACIFIC TIME TABLE. Arrives Depart

THE MAN FROM MAINE.

It there be any reliance to be placed in political forecasts and predictions, the San Francisco Chronicle thinks James G. Blaine will be the republican nominee for president in 1892, possibly, if not probably, by acclamation, and adds: It cannot be denied that Mr. Blaine commands at the present time a greater share of the admiration and confidence of the republican party than any other man in the ranks, and it would hardly be deemed rash to say that admiration and confidence extend outside of and beyond the republican party and are shared by the great body of the people of the United States.

Looking at the question as it appears at the present time, it seems that there is but one thing that can interfere with the nomination of Mr. Blaine, and that is his physical condition. We all know by this time that he has not been as near death's door as certain New York papers would have had the country believe, but we also know that he is not a thoroughly well man, though General Alger says he is as sound as any man of his age and temperament can be. Unless some untoward accident should occur, it seems safe to say that Mr. Blaine will be physically qualified to accept the nomination in 1892, and that it will be tendered him is morally certain.

Of course with Blaine in the lead the vote of the Pacific coast will be simply a question of how large the republican majority will be. No living American can contest this coast successfully with the man from Maine, a every candid person must admit, however grudgingly. Ohio has led off for Blaine in her recent convention, and Pennsylvania has swung into line with a glowing and enthusiastic indorsement of his public career, and with such a start there can be no candidate who can hope to oppose him. There are many thousands of Americans who would like to try the contest of 1884 over again and who do not believe that Grover Cleveland's star can again lead him to victory.

But after all it is not a question of men so much as of measures. The campaign of 1892 must be fought on the lines of protection against free trade, and the protection side must win, since the people of the United States are intelligent to run counter to their own interests. With James G. Blaine at the head of the ticket the campaign will be simply a triumphal march; with any other leader it will be none the less assured, but it will follow a hard and vigorous contest.

The Chronicle is jumping at conclusions. Blaine would make a good president in fact he ought to have been president a long time ago, but it is difficult to be a statesman and a politician at the same time, that is just what has defeated Blaine heretofore, and he is the same dignified statesman now as ever. The contest for the nomination certainly lies between Mr. Blaine and President Harrison, and it would seem at least hardly at this early day to assert that either one is conceded to be the future nominee.

Many interesting relics from San Domingo, where Columbus landed, have been received by the Washington office of the foreign affairs department of the world's fair. The most valuable of these relics and the most interesting, perhaps, is the first church-bell that ever rang out in the New World. It was presented to the colonists of the first settlement of Domingo by Queen Isabella in appreciation of the fact that the first settlement bore her name. There is also an exact reproduction of the cross which Columbus raised immediately upon landing. The material of the cross is the same exactly as that which Columbus nailed up, having been taken from the wood of a building erected in 1500. There are also in this collection fac-similes of the doors which close the cells in which the bones of Columbus repose. The carving of these doors is exquisite and they themselves are beautiful as a whole. There is also an anchor, supposed to have been lost by Columbus when his ship went to pieces at San Domingo on a subsequent voyage.

SCIENTISTS and explorers have perhaps puzzled their brains more over the problem of reaching the north pole than other of the unattainable projects. In the Forum for August Prof. Fridtjof Nansen, the explorer of Greenland, outlines his plans for reaching the north pole. He is to take advantage of the Jeanette's experience, and will enter the polar ocean by Bering Strait and sail westward to the New Siberian Islands and there await a favorable opportunity for reaching the highest possible latitude in open water. It was the intention of Professor Nansen to start for Bering Strait next February, but there may be some delay. He expects to pass through Bering Strait next June and reach the New Siberian Islands in August. The Norwegian assembly has granted $55,000 for the expedition, and the King and twelve private citizens have given an additional sum of $30,000. General Greeley is not impressed favorably with Professor Nansen's plans. It is the opinion of the ex-ambassador that the north pole is covered with an ice cap of enormous thickness, which will bar progress across the pole. General Greeley paints the horrors of a drift journey in latitude 81 degrees and concludes: "Arctic exploration is sufficiently credited with rashness and danger in its legitimate and sanctioned methods, without bearing the burden of Dr. Nansen's illogical scheme of self-destruction." It is possible and probable that General Greeley has not justly considered the capabilities and the resources of the Northmen.
